There is quite a lot of opencast coal mining in my constituency. That is wildly and widely unpopular. Under this Government, opencast coal production has increased from 12·9 million tonnes in 1979 to 18·9 million tonnes in 1989. That is a 50 per cent. increase in production. Nothing can be more environmentally destructive than opencast mining. There is a presumption in favour of such development in the mineral planning guidance notes. Labour will reverse that when we are in government.

Coal as a source of energy is much discredited, because it is dirty and sooty. However, clean coal combustion is now possible. The Government are aware of that, but they do not believe in investing in it. In the 1970s, in Grimethorpe, Yorkshire, fluidised bed combustion was developed. It was possible to remove all sulphur in that way, but scientists working at Grimethorpe are now going overseas because that British technology is being developed overseas.

Last Monday, at The Sunday Times exhibition at Olympia, I talked to someone involved in research into the topping cycle. He explained the background in some detail and spoke of his personal frustration in not getting sufficient support from the Department of Energy. That technology will be the main method of electricity production in the next century. The biggest resource is coal —not nuclear power, oil or gas. In the next century, electricity will be made from clean coal combustion, despite the carbon dioxide. Unfortunately, we are in that no-win situation. It will be clean coal combustion.

Acid rain is no longer one of the environmental glamour issues, but it is a serious problem. In my constituency, thin soils cannot buffer acidity in the rainfall. In Wales, the Lake District, Scotland, and Scandinavia there are serious problems of acid rain poisoning our rivers, leaching aluminium into our rivers and drinking waters, with its relationship to Alzheimer's disease and so on.

Belatedly, in 1987, the Government recognised that acid rain was a problem. They undertook to agree to the European Community's directive to introduce cuts in sulphur dioxide emissions, but, when faced with the privatisation of the electricity industry, what did they do? They reneged on those commitments and cut by a third the number of power stations to be installed with flue gas desulphurisation equipment. The awful fact is that when the Government leave office, not one of our power stations will have FGD equipment. We must compare that with Germany, Holland, Austria and Sweden, where virtually all power stations have FGD equipment. When the election comes, the "dirty man of Europe" tag will fit the Government.

Sir Hal Miller (Bromsgrove): The parrot cries of energy efficiency from the Opposition Benches remind me irresistibly of the war cry of the Wilson Government—the white heat of technical revolution that was going to save their bacon in 1969 and 1970. It creates a wonderful picture of the Labour party being as credible as double-glazing salesmen.

I refer to the contribution that the motor industry wishes to make to the improvement of the environment. I pause only to note the deep-seated hostility of the Labour and Liberal parties to the motor car and the motorist, despite the fact that 30 million people hold driving licences and there are 22 million cars on the road. I have no doubt of the consequences of that if it were followed to its logical conclusion.

I welcome the initiative of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister at the start of this week, following the Department of Transport paper on the environment. My right hon. Friend set out clearly some of the major considerations: that climate change is a global problem, but that the United Kingdom is responsible for only 3 per cent. of global emissions of carbon dioxide; that road transport in the United Kingdom is responsible for less than a fifth of that 3 per cent; the largest polluters are the power stations that are so beloved of the Labour party; and that businesses, industries, the motor car and other road transport are hotly pursued by domestic central heating as a source of carbon dioxide emissions. We need to get the matter into perspective.

I am glad that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister will chair the strategy committee. He also pointed out that one of our main aims must be to work with the market and to awaken individuals to their responsibilities in improving the environment. My right hon. Friend mentioned four subjects. I welcome the fact that two of them were energy saving and transport, about which I wish to speak. In his paper, my right hon and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport referred to the need to give market signals and to provide information, to the role of regulation and to the provision of infrastructure.

There is a balance to be struck in all these matters. If we are considering emissions from motor vehicles, it is important to note that there is a difference between a cleaner engine and a cooler engine—the cooler engine being the one that gives off less CO_2 and contributes less to global warming. The catalyst helps to clean up other emissions, but leads to further emissions of CO_2 and thus militates against efforts to reduce global warming. As I have said, there is a balance to be struck. We are trying to achieve a cleaner, cooler, quieter and safer vehicle. For the cleaner vehicle, which cleans up emissions other than CO_2, great progress has already been made with unleaded petrol, the fitting of catalytic converters and by doing away with the use of chlorofluorocarbons in motor vehicles. However, further progress could be made with the greater use of diesel engines, which are more economical, more energy efficient and give off less CO_2. They could therefore make an important contribution to reducing global warming.

My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) and I have been going around Government Departments for nearly two years outlining a programme whereby the motor industry would contribute towards the achievement of the stated target of my right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher) of maintaining CO_2 emissions at their current level until 2005. It is a matter of regret that in the Budget the Government did not pursue the advantages of the proposals that my hon. Friend sought to introduce as amendments to the Finance Bill. I hope that our further amendment may be selected for consideration next week.

I much admired, as well as enjoyed, the speech of my hon. Friend the Minister, but must advise him that the motor industry wants identified targets towards which it can work. If we have targets for energy efficiency and for emissions—as are being introduced in the EEC—and for noise and for safety, a programme of manufacture can be developed so that we can work towards those ends. My hon. Friend the Member for Northfield and I would argue that we should go down the route of market signal and incentive, as we did so successfully for unleaded petrol. We have been urging similar incentives for diesel, which would not only reduce its price in this country and bring it closer to the price elsewhere on the continent where the advantages of economy are already well understood, but would help our hard-pressed industry in this time of recession.

There have been some cheap jibes, notably in the literature of the green parties, about company cars, which have been mentioned this morning. I regretted to note a similar reference in the Department of Transport's White Paper. If we examine the facts, we find that the measures that were introduced in the Budget have increased the tax for employees while leaving their bosses with a lower level of tax. According to the Inland Revenue's own figures, more company cars are owned by people on schedule D than are used by those on schedule E. So once more the employees are paying higher tax than those who employ them.

There is also an argument about the arm's-length cost of the company car, as established by the contract hire rate. We also ignore the fact that company cars are newer and better maintained. The quickest way to make improvements is to bring new vehicles into the vehicle park. Otherwise, it will take at least 10 years to work through the 22 million vehicles which are currently on the road and ensure that they are all fitted with a catalyst to achieve the improvements that we all want. One way of helping to speed up that process is to encourage a greater turnover of vehicles and get new vehicles on the road. We must get rid of the 2 million unlicensed vehicles and the innumerable badly maintained vehicles which are the greatest polluters, as well as the noisiest and unsafest vehicles of the lot.

I hope that a stricter MOT standard will be introduced. I hope that we shall not only move immediately to four gas testing, which I was discussing with the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) earlier, but introduce calibration of equipment and standard of workshop and additional safety and noise requirements.

Noise is an important polluter. I have a warning for my hon. Friend the Minister from a constituency factory which is interested in the production of axle load indicators. It has advised me this week that the EEC legislation is moving towards adopting overall payload rather than axle weight. Yet we have always been given to understand that it is axle weight which is so damaging to our road structure and so influential on noise levels.

Time does not permit me to make all the remarks that I had prepared, so I must come to a conclusion to allow my colleagues to take part in the debate. The quality of the environment is an important freedom for us all. When I took my young son swimming in the river two summers ago, I suddenly realised that it was an unusual experience for him, whereas I was taught to swim in the river. Both the schools that I attended took us swimming in the river. I hope that my son and my grandchildren will also in due course be able to swim safely in the river.

The motor industry is anxious and willing to make its contribution to improving the environment for all of us, as well as giving us the advantages of mobility and security. Security is important for mothers on the school run or women travelling late at night who do not feel safe on public transport. It is an important issue. We are willing to make that contribution. We ask that targets be set and that research should be conducted into new technologies, including alternative fuels. What is the point of concentrating all our attention on what comes out of the exhaust instead of what goes into the engine in the first place? We welcome the White Paper and the fact that there will be a report, and we look forward to making our contribution.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett (Denton and Reddish): I welcome the opportunity to discuss green issues, but I regret that this has been such a wide-ranging debate, because it is not easy to comment on some of the issues raised.

In the past three months, I have been fortunate enough to visit the constituencies of Stroud, Salisbury, Exeter, Falmouth and Camborne, Teignbridge, Suffolk, Coastal and Waveney at the invitation of prospective Labour candidates. I have spoken to the various environmental groups in those areas as well as to footpath officers, conservationists, representatives of the National Farmers Union, the Country Landowners Association and others about the Labour party policies contained in our document, "Earthly Chance". We discussed problems such as access to the countryside and how we can maintain the quality of the countryside. Those meetings were constructive and useful and I was pleased at the number of people who were excited by the proposals in the Labour party document.

The consensus that emerged from those meetings was one of concern about farm incomes and the difficulty that is placed on those who are required to maintain our countryside in the neatly farmed way which we have come to accept and enjoy. People were extremely interested in the Labour party's policy of green premiums.

During my campaign I was pleased to note that the Government announced their country stewardship scheme, because it looks as though the Government are following the Labour party. They have now recognised that we must find ways in which we can assist farmers to protect and maintain the countryside. We should not pay farmers just to undertake more and more food production.

I am concerned, however, that the Government are putting up only £13 million for the country stewardship scheme. On Wednesday, I gathered from the Secretary of State for the Environment that the money will be spread over three years and that it will be administered by the Countryside Commission.

I am pleased that the DOE has taken an initiative on the countryside, but it is important to compare it with the negative response to the set-aside scheme, which was proposed by the European Community and is administered by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Have we got the balance right? I plead with the Government to expand the country stewardship scheme. Perhaps they should hand it over to MAFF to administer, but the principles set by the DOE should be retained so that we can do much more to protect the incomes of those in the countryside. We are talking not just about farmers' income, but about that of farmworkers and those in the neighbourhood who provide support services. I urge the Minister to consider the scheme to see how some of the money from the EC for the set-aside scheme can be used in a more positive way to develop and protect the countryside.

We must do much more positive work to protect the hedgerows. I am delighted that the Government have stopped giving grants to people to tear up the hedgerows, but I still regret that too many hedgerows are disappearing through neglect. They must be properly maintained and, after 30 years, they need to be properly layed. Throughout my visits, it became the exception rather than the rule to see a well-layed hedge.

I am absolutely appalled at the amount of litter we see. It is not a question whether an authority is Labour controlled, because most authorities have an appalling litter problem. I welcome the Environmental Protection Act 1990 although I am not certain whether the Government have got it right. When the Minister replies, I hope that he will tell us when the provisions on litter contained in that Act will come into operation. When will on-the-spot fines be introduced? When will individuals be able to take local authorities to court if they fail to deliver the goods?

I do not blame local authorities entirely for the litter problem. The fact is that people still drop too much litter. Unfortunately, people are schizophrenic in their attitude to litter. When I visit schools, the pupils are terribly enthusiastic about green issues. The are concerned not just about the rain forests and the whale, but about the problems of littter. There may be huge posters about litter, but when I leave those schools I often see a trail of sweet papers and ice-cream wrappers.

We must convince people that litter is everybody's problem.

I am concerned about the problems in the Tameside and Stockport areas of my constituency, where the litter collection service is a disgrace. Tameside has continually said that it does not have the money to do it and is looking for ways to improve the service. I fear that, so far, it has not succeeded in achieving any improvement.

On the other hand, Stockport fully embraced the Government approach and privatised its refuse and litter collection services. It worked on the basis that, as the Government had claimed, if it privatised the services, the work would be done more cheaply and with better quality. Despite what the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) said about the great Liberal green policies, the response of the Liberals in Stockport, where they comprise the largest party on the council, has been a disaster.

The Government's policy was followed, the services were put out to tender and a bid was accepted from Focsa, a Spanish company, which was to carry out the refuse and litter services. Leaflets were distributed to all households stating that there would be a better service. In the event, the service has been far worse, and I have had to contact chief officers about sites not being cleaned up properly.

The local authority discovered that it had made a mess by letting the tender to Focsa because some streets had not even been included in the tender. The company had put in a low bid simply to get the business, hoping that in the future it could put the price up. The authority is now faced with having to decide whether to withdraw the contract from the company and, if so, whether it would then be possible to find another company to provide a service at the right price. At present, litter collection there is a disgrace and it is time that the Liberal-dominated council sorted the matter out.

The Minister referred briefly to the issue of green labels, but I was disappointed with what he said. He repeated the promise that we have often heard in the House—it was stated in an Adjournment debate of mine last March—that it was hoped to have a scheme in place by 1 January.

Mr. Trippier: I had to cover many subjects in my speech and could not spend long on that one. I assure the hon. Gentleman that I am satisfied, having attended the last meeting of the Environment Council in Europe, that the eco-labelling directive will come out of the next Council meeting in October or, at the latest, in December of this year.

Mr. Bennett: The Minister promised that a scheme would be in operation by January. If that is to happen, manufacturers must be told in September or October what to state on the packets, depending on the products and how long it takes to produce them and get them to the shops. I hope that the scheme will be in operation quickly. The longer the delay, the more people are conned, as he suggested, by buying products that are claimed to be environmentally friendly when they are not. Much good will is lost in that way.

I like the idea of waste disposal credits. It makes sense to encourage people to recycle material rather than use it to fill up holes in the ground. But a problem exists between the collection and disposal authorities. If credits are given to collection authorities, they remove various items, but the disposal authorities take out the same items, so the two are working in opposition directions.

Greater Manchester waste disposal authority is working hard to extract tin cans, but becomes concerned when the volume of cans in the refuse falls below a certain level because it is then not worth while to run all the refuse through the magnets and so on to remove the cans.

North West Water plc and Tameside local authority —two totally different organisations—have great charters about green issues. North West Water says how environmentally friendly it is, and explains how it has tackled certain problems and how it wants to encourage access to the countryside. The trouble is that trees are cut down to produce those documents on green issues, but when it comes to specific cases neither the local authority nor the water company takes a blind bit of notice.

I am delighted that the Secretary of State has called for an inquiry into the Kingswater development. I hope that the inspector will find in favour of the local residents, who do not want one of the nicest areas of open space between Manchester and Tameside to be destroyed by a business park. A problem has developed in the past couple of weeks. The local authority considered the planning application in the autumn and in January the Secretary of State called for an inquiry—it is now set for 12 September. The local authority's Queen's Counsel has now told the local authority that it is in a mess, because it has no concrete proposals for road access to the site and he has recommended that North West Water should ask for the inquiry to be delayed for six months. The Tameside officials do not want such a delay and are now trying to rush through a road proposal, which was due to be announced yesterday or today. People will have 28 days to object to it, and a local authority meeting will be held to discuss it sometime towards the end of August. The local authority could then simply tell the inspector on 12 September that there is a concrete road proposal. The road proposal reverses a decision made by the inspector on the proposals for a motorway in my constituency. I hope that the Minister will consider the matter carefully and tell Tameside that it is not good enough to try to rush the road access proposal through in two months at the most, in preparation for the public inquiry. If local people are to be consulted effectively, the public inquiry on the Kingswater development should be postponed for six months. The road issue and the subject of the inquiry could then be properly considered so that proper local debate on the issue could take place. I shall write to the Minister in a little more detail on that subject.

The Government must get on with turning some of their rhetoric on green issues into practice. They must set out to make the country stewardship scheme work so that much more money is spent on conservation rather than merely on food production. We must have effective action on litter, because it is an absolute disgrace. A working system of green labelling should be in place by 1 January. Finally, we must do much more to ensure that we do not continue to tip natural resources into holes in the ground, because we may have to dig them out in the future. I welcome the opportunity for a debate on green issues, but I wish that the House had more time to discuss them today and more opportunities to return to them.

1.38 pm

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): About five years ago, having spent almost a lifetime in personnel work, I put my name forward to become a member of the Employment Select Committee. For some reason I was overlooked, so I asked my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Sir M. Fox) why. He told me not to worry because there was a vacancy on the Environment Committee—which also begins with an E. My membership of that Committee was my introduction to the subject. The past five years have been thoroughly exciting and interesting, and I pay tribute to the Chairman of the Committee for the work that he has done in those five years to bring so many issues to the public's attention. Many of them are commonplace today, but were then rare and novel—for example, acid rain and other subjects that we were supposed to have debated this morning but which have not been mentioned. I can understand why as it is difficult to isolate the environment in the United Kingdom from that in the rest of the world. That is one fact that we have discovered from our work on the Select Committee during the past five years or more.

The reports before us have some element of criticism of the Government, some suggestions and some positive points that may be controversial. But every one of our reports has come out with the unanimous support for the composition of the Committees. The manpower changes in those Committees has been quite high, particularly among Labour Members, as more and more of them are promoted to become Opposition spokesmen and women. None of the reports has come out with a minority view. That means that we have sought to put the environment above party politics, and we must continue to do so.

Therefore, I was disappointed—although perhaps I should not have been surprised—by the speech of the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor), which was nothing more than a catalogue of carping comments, with selective statistics, and which did nothing to elevate the debate or introduce any constructive proposals. That is not the way that we try to do things on the Select Committees.

I always make a wry note of the fact that, because of the way this place works, the Liberal party, from which there is never anyone present at Select Committee meetings, is always offered an early and long bite of the cherry in debates in the Chamber, despite the fact that Liberal Members show no interest in the subject in the House. If someone has to go to a funeral, it is not beyond the wit of man to find someone else to sit in and participate in a debate. However, Liberal Members do not do so, and there is a void in the Chamber and on the Select Committee. That may not be entirely the fault of the Liberal party; it may be partly due to the way in which Select Committees are chosen. The Select Committee on the Environment is a public Committee to which anyone can come, but, to my knowledge, during the five years in which I have served the Committee, not once has a Liberal party observer been present or taken any interest in anything that we have done.

Sir Hugh Rossi: May I set the record absolutely straight? There was a Liberal Member on the Select Committee of the Environment until 1985, when he was made Liberal Chief Whip and had to resign from the Committee. I asked for that place on the Committee to be kept open for the whole of one Parliament so that the Liberals could replace him, but no one could be found from among their ranks who was willing to serve. At the general election, the Labour party asked for and obtained that place.

Mr. Holt: I am grateful to the Chairman of the Committee, whose experience goes back even further than mine, for explaining the correct position.

We have heard talk about the terrible pollution on beaches, but it was not mentioned that the Select Committee has found that measuring equipment used today to determine whether the water contains pollutants is superior to that available 30 or 40 years ago. There is no doubt that, if today's equipment had been available then, we would have found that the beaches were worse in those days than they are today, but we have no way of recording that.

Last week we heard that the east Germans reckon that it will be 10 years before raw sewage is no longer spread around their beaches. We are a long way from that, and a long way ahead of the east Germans, but we still have more work to do.

Chlorofluorocarbons present a huge international problem. I asked an Indian Government official how the Indian Government would deal with the problem of refrigeration and CFCs in the Indian sub-continent, as more refrigerators were used there and as the people turned more to western standards. He said, "I challenge you to go up to an Indian peasant woman who has lived all her life with the wish to have a refrigerator and to tell her that she cannot have it because it will increase the CFCs in the atmosphere, although people in the west want to keep their refrigerators." When we spoke to the Brazilians about the tropical forests, they said that they did not have a problem of cutting down the forests. They said that the west had the problem of too many cars. They said that if we cut out our cars, they would not have a problem with the forests. Trying to introduce some rationale takes the whole debate on the environment outside normal party politics. We should consider the matter more objectively and constructively.

For the first time, we have a Government who have listened to what we have said and who have introduced some of the measures that we have proposed. It was interesting to note that, when we first said that we would investigate indoor pollution, the following week the Department of the Environment, for the first time, issued a circular on indoor pollution. That was a coincidence par excellence. It shows that the Department listened and it shows the value of the Select Committee and its reports.

I endorse the remark made by my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) about the Minister not mentioning Northern Ireland in his speech. It is an area of particular beauty and, as we saw when we went there, there are pollution problems that we should take on board.

I represent the chemical heart of England on Teesside. There are problems there of toxic waste and cleaning up. We have the new power station from Enron and gases come ashore there to create power. Close by, there is the Hartlepool nuclear power station. We are aware of all the pollution problems, and we are also aware that one cannot turn the clock back. We cannot say to people that they must not have this or that, because they have been used to turning on the switch to get electric light, and to having electricity for cooking and for all the other things that we take for granted. It all has a price which has to be paid in environmental and in financial terms. Getting the balance right is the most important job that the Government must tackle.

I listened to Opposition Members talking about polluted beaches. We have them in Durham. Why? We have coalfields there. Until this Government came to power, no Government had done anything about that. The problem has been recognised, time limits have been set, and something will be done. The churlishness of the Opposition in failing to give the Government recognition for that does their cause no good.

There is no doubt that the water industry was starved of cash under the 1974-79 Labour Government. I was a member of the Thames water board at the time and I know how difficult it was for us as a water authority to keep up with basic maintenance, let alone to carry out replacement and renovation. Everything in the ground was getting older, but could not be replaced or repaired.

It is a shame that we have had this debate on a Friday. It would have been a better debate if more Back-Bench Members had been able to make contributions. They would have been better than the nonsense that we heard from the hon. Member for Dewsbury. Some of her remarks do not deserve comment, but I want to mention

Friends of the the Earth. They are an irritant to many people, but they sometimes make good points. If we did not have them, we should have to invent them. Why not recognise that we have pressure groups? All of them have axes to grind and much of the time what they say will be of little consequence. However, occasionally they get it right. It would be good if the Government could occasionally say that the Opposition have a good point and that they accept it. It would be even better if the Opposition would occasionally say that they support the Government on an issue and that they understand the Government's problems. They should say that they understand that the problem of pollution has developed over decades and centuries. We should approach in a far less partisan way matters such as contaminated land for which no records exist.

I warn the Government not to place too much hope on Europe, because it will clearly make the wrong moves on eco labelling. European countries do not know what they want and are pulling in different directions. Consequently, we shall have to take matters into our own hands. I am sure that the Select Committee on the Environment will make recommendations on that important subject. Members on both Front Benches should agree on eco labelling, and we should not play party politics about whether a label will contain too little or too much. The public will have to trust such a label and we should agree on what it should contain.

The environment is and will continue to be a major issue. In a party speech my right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher) said that we have only a leasehold on this earth. She was absolutely right. It is the Government's responsibility to make sure that environmental issues are properly treated, and it is the responsibility of Back Benchers to make sure that the Government do that. I look forward to another five years' service on the Select Committee, which is carrying out precisely that task.

Mr. Roger King (Birmingham, Northfield): Not long ago, my journey from Birmingham to London took two and a half hours and the fuel consumption of the car that I then had was about six gallons. Now, the same journey takes just under two hours and my present car's fuel consumption is no more than two and a half gallons. The difference is due to the fact that the Government have completed the M40 motorway which has relieved congestion along an arduous and outdated route through Banbury and Oxford, causing pollution, congestion and heavy fuel consumption.

New roads and those that are being built have freed up traffic which is therefore not consuming as much fuel and, obviously, not causing as much pollution. The other significant reason for decreased fuel consumption is that I have changed my car. I now drive a diesel vehicle and I am reaping the benefits of a superior form of internal combustion engine which is more energy efficient and which provides the power and performance that I want.

Some differences between petrol and diesel cars are quite staggering. The touring economy of a car is obtained by taking the calculations of fuel consumption for the urban cycle, at 56 mph and at 75 mph and weighting them. Under that formula a car such as the Montego powered by a two-litre petrol engine has a fuel consumption of 35·4 miles per gallon. The diesel equivalent will accomplish 55·8 miles per gallon. That is an enormous increase and it is due to the ability of the diesel engine to squeeze extra energy out of every litre of fuel.

A bigger executive car such as the Rover 827 will deliver 26·6 miles to a gallon of petrol. Its diesel equivalent, the Rover 825, will cover 40·7 miles to the gallon. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) said some months ago, an alternative form of engine would enable us to make enormous strides in saving fuel and in reducing the output of carbon dioxide, which is a difficult gas to control. Of course there are other pollutants, but, because a diesel car can travel further on a gallon of fuel, it will cause much less pollution than its petrol equivalent.

The introduction of catalysts to solve the problem of exhaust emissions from petrol cars may be a good and sensible idea, but, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove pointed out, catalysts actually exacerbate the problem because those dangerous pollutants are turned to CO_2. Therefore, the vehicle not only goes less far on a gallon of fuel but emits further carbon dioxide.

It has been said that the wider use of diesel vehicles will lead to an increase in other forms of pollution—black smoke, soot on buildings, health hazards, particulate emissions—and that that is a further reason for not embracing the diesel car. However, despite long-standing research into the consequencies of diesel exhaust, there is no evidence that it is in any way carcinogenic. Although German and United States agencies, which are generally in the lead in research on exhaust emissions, have done an enormous amount of testing, no hidden problems have been discerned. I understand that a committee has been set up in this country, but I have been unable to ascertain who belongs to it or what findings it is establishing. Presumably, it is either duplicating experiments conducted elsewhere or developing new experiements.

Particulate emissions are a result of the sulphur content of the fuel used. The European Commission has announced that, by 1996, the sulphur content of fuel should be reduced to a low level. However, there is no national standard for sulphur contents in diesel fuel. The oil companies try to keep it to a reasonable level, but it tends to go up and down according to the refining process. The Government have encouraged the use of unleaded fuel, so it would be easy for them to impose a reduction of the sulphur content of diesel fuel at a far quicker rate. We should be moving as a European group of nations.

There is strong evidence that unleaded fuel, which is more accurately and highly refined than leaded fuel, contains more benzine than leaded fuel. Experiments in the United States have shown that this seems to have carcinogenic side effects on those who inhale the fumes when filling up their cars. Therefore, it is not the case that unleaded petrol has no side effects on health. There is some linkage there, although there is not on diesel fuel.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove and I have had similar problems in our attempts to encourage the Government to introduce an incentive for the buying of diesel cars, along the line of the fiscal incentive to use unleaded fuel. If people were encouraged to buy diesel cars, it is possible that we would reduce CO_2 emissions by the year 2005, or even halt them at the present level. Unless we adopt a policy of incentives, there is little chance of the motor industry and the car user being able to play a part in reducing CO_2 emissions.

[Mr. Roger King]

The Government have many arguments about why no incentives should be offered. We have written to the Department of the Environment and the Department of Transport—and to the Treasury, because it decides on tax concessions. I imagine that the Departments have consulted each other, so we end up with responses similar to the one from my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury. She said in a letter to me:

"Diesel fuel, derv, contains roughly 14 per cent. more carbon per litre of fuel than petrol does, and thus generates correspondingly more carbon dioxide per litre consumed."

That is true, but it overlooks the fact that, for the same amount of fuel, a diesel car will go a lot further.

The Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders—I assume that the House understands that it is well versed in these matters—says:

"Allowing for relative carbon content by volume of fuel, the fuel economy advantage of the diesel, up to 30 per cent. per litre per 100 kilometre term, translates into a CO_2 advantage in grams per kilometre of up to a 20 per cent. saving over a petrol equivalent."

Although the Treasury and Government Departments say that there is more carbon in diesel, the fact that the car travels further on diesel fuel wipes out the discrepancy and provides a 20 per cent. benefit. Diesel cars are more expensive to manufacture because they are more complex and robust. If, however, we can reduce both the price of diesel cars and the price of diesel fuel, the Government will be able to meet its road transport target by 2005.

If our amendment is selected on the Report stage of the Finance Bill, we hope to introduce a clause that will provide some latitude as regards the 10 per cent. special car tax. We shall concentrate on banding cars, based on their touring fuel consumption. I hope that the Government will consider carefully that interesting concept. Unless they encourage people to purchase fuel-efficient cars—and the only way to do that is through the wallet—they will never meet the target they have set themselves. As soon as the Government appreciate that fact and introduce financial incentives, the target will be met. The car industry will manufacture the products that it knows that it can make and that it wants to make, and that will be good for everyone.

Mr. Keith Mans (Wyre): Both Opposition parties have a hang up about nuclear power. They always find a way round admitting that it is a very efficient means of generating electricity. However good our energy conservation measures may be, nuclear energy produces less carbon dioxide and sulphur dioxide than power generated by fossil fuels. The sooner we get that message over, the better it will be for our energy policy.

I welcome the debate. I have always believed that we need to keep environmental issues at the forefront of political discussion. I shall concentrate on how local communities can improve their environment. Environmental improvement is not just a matter of the Government telling people what to do. It is up to individuals and organisations to get on with it themselves. That requires a considerable amount of explanation and objectivity on the part of local pressure groups and councillors.

I intend to give an example from my area to demonstrate how things can go right. It might provide a few lessons for the future. It will not be a complete surprise to hon. Members to hear that the coastline around Blackpool, near my constituency, needs to be cleaned up. Neglect over decades by North West Water was largely the result of lack of Government funding, particularly during the period when the Labour Government were in power between 1974 and 1979. In real terms, the amount spent on cleaning up the sewage around our coasts was reduced from £900 million in 1974 to £400 million in 1979.

It should also be noted that the local Labour party first became involved in environmental matters when the Labour-controlled Lancashire county council opposed a scheme to improve the quality of sewage disposal along the Fylde coast. The method suggested by North West Water was old-fashioned and inadequate, in my opinion, but I suspect that the county's opposition to it had much more to do with the imminent privatisation of the water industry than with any long-term concern for the environment.

I shall not detain hon. Members by describing the subsequent events, apart from saying that the Government rightly decided that the scheme was not good enough and asked North West Water to think again. In the intervening period, environmental awareness locally has increased tremendously, partly as a result of the environment becoming an important issue nationally, but also because local people began to discuss in detail the best way that the coastline could be cleaned up.

Over the past two years the political climate on the Fylde coast has also changed. We now have a Labour-controlled borough council in Blackpool and greater representation by the Labour party in Fleetwood. It will not surprise my colleagues to learn that Labour's view on environmental improvement matters has, as a result of those political changes, also changed. We now hear less about Blackpool's dirty beaches, and although Labour councillors in Fleetwood were largely elected on the basis of their opposition to the pipeline, they now face the possibility of the construction of a sewage works and a pipeline beside the town, both of which seem to have the approval of their Labour colleagues at county hall.

Therefore, it is not surprising that many people in Fleetwood feel betrayed by the Labour party which gave the distinct impression that it supported the town against organisations like North West Water which wanted to treat all Fylde's sewage by way of a long sea outfall or by a sewage plant near Fleetwood.

It is interesting to note that the county council now supports the present scheme. It would be no exaggeration to say that the Labour party locally is hopelessly split on the issue. County politicians want the sewage works to be built so that they can support their Labour colleagues in Blackpool borough. In doing that, they have ditched Fleetwood.

I make that point because it shows the difficulty with local environmental issues if they become bogged down in local politics. That is certainly what has happened in this case. We must ensure that in future environmental matters are dealt with on a slightly higher plain so that we can move forward and find the best solution from an environmental point of view.

The scheme on the Fylde coast needs further improvement. We must find ways to dispose of the sludge effectively. The Select Committee on the Environment—of which I was a member for many years—has said that incineration rather than landfill is the way forward. It is also worth stating that landfill has problems because of the need to comply with the EEC directive on landfill sites that will come into force in 1997.

I very much support what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said recently about the creation of a new environmental protection agency. I should like it to be called the environmental improvement agency, because that it is what it is all about. It is important for the Government to create targets, for outside agencies to regulate and for everyone else, in the best way possible, to try to improve the environment individually as well as in groups.

2.7 pm

Mr. Win Griffiths (Bridgend): We have had a long and interesting debate in which, unfortunately, because it has been so wide-ranging, we have not been able to consider in depth some very important subjects. It is also a pity that we could not have this debate until almost a year after the White Paper was published.

Perhaps the delay was due to the fact that the Government did not want to be reminded of the reaction of the press to the White Paper. Although most papers normally support the Government, the response of the press to the White Paper was lukewarm, to say the least. For example, one paper said that the White Paper contained 350 proposals with more conditions and caveats than an insurance policy. The Times described the White Paper as "a white flag" rather than a White Paper. The Times editorial stated that "pressure for further improvements is more likely to come from Brussels than from Whitehall, a sad comment on the efficiency of National Sovereignty."

We were told also that it was a

"compendium of muted declarations of hesitant intent"; and that it set

"a floor below which it would be disastrous to sink."

Another paper said that it was

"as feeble as it is lengthy."

It described it not as an action programme but as a discussion paper, and that is after 11 years of Conservative government.

The immediate response to the White Paper was not very promising. Just about everybody in the press, whatever their political complexion, felt that the Government could have done far better.

Several hon. Members have referred to an environmental protection agency to deal with all environmental protection matters, and some hon. Members have queried the birth of the idea. The idea was probably born in one of the fine pressure groups such as Friends of the Earth, Greenpeace, the Royal Society for Nature Conservation, the Marine Conservation Society or the Council for the Protection of Rural England. A host of bodies are doing fine work and are acting as an irritant, as the hon. Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) described it, provoking us to improve our environment.

The Labour party's proposal for an environmental protection service under one roof was first made in a statement to the Labour party conference in 1986. It was included as a manifesto commitment in 1987. I have been looking at the White Paper, because the Minister said that it intimated that the Government would consider an environmental protection agency. All that I have been able to find in the White Paper are some references to it on page 232. When describing the medium-term options, the Government said:

"The disbenefits of administrative change will diminish over time, and experience with the new systems may add to the case for some further rationalisation of these structures. One option which the Government will wish to consider in due course would be to create a new umbrella body responsible for overseeing the pollution control work of the NRA and HMIP. Under such an arrangement these bodies would keep their separate identity and independence, but the new umbrella body would oversee their implementation of pollution control and work for greater consistency of approach."

That is the medium-term option, which still does not envisage a single body. Nevertheless, I would be quite happy for the Minister to direct me to the spot in the White Paper at which there is eminent consideration of introducing a single environmental protection agency. Of course, that is only to be lauded. The Prime Minister made a statement earlier this week, and I hope that, as a result, we will develop a coherent position on an environmental protection agency.

The National Society for Clean Air believes that there are many undecided questions about how the agency will work. Reading between the lines of its brief, it suspects that that idea has not properly been worked out and that it has yet to be considered properly by all Departments. Perhaps the Minister could tell me how many times the ministerial committee for co-ordinating environment policy has met since the publication of the White Paper. I have been given to understand that it has met just once, which hardly seems a good record for a Government who are supposed to be concerned about our environment.

The truth is that the Government are reluctant participants in the effort to clean up our environment. They have been forced to act. Let us not forget that they have been in power since 1979. The White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", was produced only after the Government had been shocked out of their wits by the performance of the Green party in the European elections in areas that are normally thought of as Conservative strongholds. That is why the Government were pushed and prompted into action. However, our policies were already well developed. In 1979, after the European elections, the British Labour group, of which I used to be a member, provided the first chairman of the European Parliament's environment policy committee in Mr. Ken Collins, who is a very good friend of mine. He was the first chairman; he was then vice-chairman for a brief period and is now once again the chairman of that committee. That shows the priority that the Labour Members of the European Parliament attached to participating in environmental policy making.

In virtually every policy area, the Government have been dragged along by European legislation. Let us take water quality as an example. The directive on beaches, about which we have heard a lot this morning, was supposed to have been implemented in full by 1986, but the Government will be lucky if they can implement it by 1996. Although the target date in most cases is 1995, there already seems to be some slippage in the programme. It does not look as if those dates will be achieved. Although, as I have said, the directive was supposed to be fully implemented by 1986, it was not until that year, after seven years of Conservative government, that the number of British beaches falling under the terms of the directive was increased from 27 to the top 300. As was revealed by my own questions in the European Parliament, the Government decided to act only after they had been threatened with action in the European Court of Justice.

[Mr. Win Griffiths]

Although the privatisation of the water industry resulted in the plus of a separate National Rivers Authority to supervise and to try to control the activities of the errant water companies, sewage works were given derogations that allowed them to pollute the water. Despite having those derogations, there have still been instances of privatised water companies polluting water and being threatened with prosecution or prosecuted by the NRA.

On top of that, the chairmen of the water companies have been giving themselves huge pay rises. The chairman of Welsh Water has had an 88 per cent. rise while that company's workers have received about 8 per cent. The water company increased its charges by 16·5 per cent. In the same year its chairman received a massive pay rise, supposedly to reflect the improved performance of the company. It is true that the company made a huge profit, but the chairman was in charge of a company in which the number of pollution incidents for which it was responsible doubled.

The Government should do something serious about such massive pay increases, which the Minister condemned at environment questions last Wednesday. He should consider introducing a fine scheme. A modest £10 reduction for each pollution incident could be knocked off the salary of the chairmen of water companies. In the case of the Welsh chairman, who is one of my constituents, that would result in a cut of more than £7,000.

The chairman of Welsh Water had the cheek and the humbug to be quoted in a long interview which appeared in yesterday's issue of the Western Mail. He said:

"What bothers me more and upsets me greatly is when my boys, the workers who provide the water and clean up our mess, get the flak as well. People just do not realise the value of what we at Welsh Water provide—and all for about 25p a day."

Those workers were not valued sufficiently for the chairman of Welsh water to give them a similar increase to that which his board gave him. That was at a time when pollution incidents doubled.

The Government have hamstrung the National Rivers Authority in taking water companies to court when they pollute. An unpleasant incident has been the result of some correspondence between the Minister and me. It involved the pollution of Eaglie brook with PCBs. In a reply dated 27 June the Minister said that the Germans had been allowed two years to meet the pollution emission standards. Yet a letter was sent to my hon. Friend the Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) from the free university of Berlin. It arrived with us the day before the letter from the Minister. It says:

"Concerning your question whether in Germany the textile industry was given a two-year permit to fulful the PCP directive of the European Community, I have asked the German environmental agency Mr. Neihardt, who is responsible for PCP. He told me that the PCP regulation and the regulation for dangerous materials in 1989-90 came into force and that PCP for textiles was forbidden immediately in Germany."

That means that the textile industry had no transitional period. There seems to be a conflict between what the Minister understands about the position in Germany and what the Germans understand.

Across the board the Government have been dragging their feet. For example, for the sake of energy efficiency, how do we cut CO_2 emissions? Simply by following the recommendations in the House of Lords report which was leaked this week—undoubtedly we shall have the benefit of it shortly—we could make a 10 per cent. reduction in our energy use. We could do that if only, instead of cutting the money available for the Energy Efficiency Office, the Government increased it and made a serious effort to deal with energy efficiency problems. That is one simple way in which the Government could take some immediate action.

The Planning and Compensation Bill does not contain a single measure sponsored by the Government which has anything to do with improving our environment.

Mr. Trippier: Does the hon. Gentleman intend to allow me to reply to the debate?

Mr. Griffiths: The Minister will realise that the informal agreement made behind the Chair has not been honoured. I can see no reason why I should not complete the points that I want to make and leave the Minister whatever time is left at the end. Even if I do that, I believe that every Conservative Member has spoken longer than me. I shall complete my remarks and in the time left the Minister can reply to the debate.

Mr. Mans: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Griffiths: If I give way, that would take time out of the Minister's speech.

The Government have dragged their feet on air pollution, because they have not honoured their commitment to clean up power stations.

Mr. Trippier: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Griffiths: No, I will not.

The Government have not honoured their commitments on flue gas desulphurisation which were made when the directive on emission standards was discussed in Europe.

Mr. Mans: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) claims that his speech will be shorter than that of any Conservative Member. I ask him to withdraw that inaccurate claim.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): That is an interesting point, but it is not one that the Chair can resolve.

Mr. Holt: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Many of us came here to participate in the debate. We had hoped that, at the end, a Minister of the Crown would answer the points and criticisms that we have made. Is not it wrong, unusual and unparliamentary that the Opposition Front-Bench spokesman should deliberately seek to speak out time to preclude the Minister from replying to the points raised by my hon. Friends and me?

Madam Deputy Speaker: It is usual for both Front-Bench spokesmen to have an opportunity to wind up such a debate. That is what I would expect to happen.

Sir Hugh Rossi: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Is there a possibility through our Standing Orders to prolong the debate by resolution of the House? It is clear from what the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) has said that he has no intention of allowing the Minister to reply to the debate. As Chairman of a Select Committee representing all parties, I raised a number of important questions on the Prime Minister's statement at the beginning of the week on which I and many people outside the House are anxious to hear an answer. The hon. Member for Bridgend is now denying us that opportunity.

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman is a long-standing and experienced parliamentarian. He knows that the Chair has no authority in such matters. We have three minutes only left; we must now make progress.

Mr. Holt: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I have been here when the Chair has ordered someone to sit down. When Bruinvels was here he was ordered to sit down and shut up because the Chair had had enough. Could not you use that authority today?

Madam Deputy Speaker: I use much gentler tactics and hold my fury for another occasion.

Mr. Roger King: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. What advice would you give to me? I asked my hon. Friend the Minister a number of questions and I am now awaiting a response. Have you any suggestions as to how I might receive that response, Madam Deputy Speaker? Will I receive it via the written word or——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman understands our practices and Standing Orders, so he will know that the Chair does not offer advice across the Chamber. It is normal for such advice to be sought outside the Chamber. The hon. Member is seeking information from the Minister, and all I can suggest is that he now gets it in writing, unless we can make some progress so that the Minister has a couple of minutes in which to reply.

Mr. Griffiths: When I was interrupted, I had spoken for less than 20 minutes—far less than many Conservative Members. Nearly five minutes have been taken up by the points of order, and I am sorry if the Minister will not have time to respond. Frankly, the time left for the wind-up speeches was 23 minutes, all because Conservative Members spoke for so long.

Sir Hugh Rossi: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. In relation to the hon. Gentleman's last statement, do you agree that it has been the time-honoured practice in the House that, whatever time may have been taken in speeches by Back Benchers, the remaining time at the end of a debate is divided equally between the Minister and the shadow Minister? That practice has been breached disgracefully this afternoon by the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths).

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have always understood when I have been in the Chair that the time remaining is divided equally between Members on both Front Benches.

Mr. Trippier: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. In view of the disgraceful behaviour of the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths), I assure hon. Members who have participated in the debate that I shall reply to them by letter on the points that they raised. I shall at least observe that courtesy, even if the hon. Member for Bridgend does not seem to recognise any courtesy.

It being half past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE (FINANCE BILL)

Ordered,

That, notwithstanding the practice of the House as to the intervals between stages of Bills brought in upon Ways and Means Resolutions, more than one stage of the Finance Bill may be taken at any sitting of the House.—[Mr. Wood.]

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS BILL [LORDS]

Ordered,

That, in respect of the Foreign Corporations Bill [Lords], notices of Amendments new Clauses and new Schedules to be moved in Committee may be accepted by the Clerks at the Table before the Bill has been read a second time.—[Mr. Wood.]

CONSOLIDATION, &c., BILLS

Ordered,

That, in respect of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Bill [Lords], the Deer Bill [Lords], the Land Drainage Bill [Lords], the Statute Law Revision (Isle of Man) Bill [Lords], the Statutory Water Companies Bill [Lords], the Water Consolidation (Consequential Provisions) Bill [Lords], the Water Industry Bill [Lords] and the Water Resources Bill [Lords], notices of Amendments, new Clauses and new Schedules to be moved in Committee may be accepted by the Clerks at the Table before the Bills have been read a second time.—[Mr. Wood.]

Community Charge

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Wood.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Hugo Summerson (Walthamstow): I welcome this opportunity to raise in the House a very important matter. The roots of this debate lie deep in the grubby soil of municipal extremism. For years Labour party activists have seen what they think is an opportunity to attack the Government through town halls. Never mind the provision of good, affordable local services; the cry went up that the town hall must oppose the House of Commons.

The latest manifestation of that was announcements by Labour elected representatives—councillors and, I am sorry to say, Members of this House—that they would refuse to pay the community charge. By what perversion of parliamentary political principle they decided to do that I do not know. If anyone should know that in this country the rule is that of law, it should be democratically elected representatives.

The main result of that was to give heart to those who decided to follow their example, doubtless on the ground that if the people at the town hall, the leaders of the community, said it was all right, it must be all right for them.

In my borough, the London borough of Waltham Forest, £60 million should have been collected last year, but £16·79 million is still outstanding, so that only 72 per cent. has been collected. That makes Waltham Forest the seventh worst performer in the country. The top six—Lambeth, Liverpool, Islington, Newham, Southampton and Birmingham—are all Labour, as is Waltham Forest.

The average collection rate across the country is 90 per cent. Waltham Forest and those others come nowhere near that. By the fact that they have collected so little, they have inevitably dragged the average collection rate down, though in some authorities it is nearly 100 per cent.

One can tell at a glance which authorities are Labour and which have a poor record in collecting community charge—the two go together—as they have all imposed heavy surcharges on their community charge payers this year to make up for their incompetence last year.

The surcharge in Waltham Forest is no less than £50·29. That has caused enormous resentment and public outcry. What a record that Labour council has since it was elected in 1986. In 1987 it increased rates by 62 per cent. It has one of the highest community charges in the country, £438 last year, and is now imposing a heavy surcharge of more than £50 to pay for women's committees and nuclear-free zones. But it has rubbish-strewn streets and the worst education results in London, despite spending the most money. In other words, it has all the manifestations of extreme loony left socialism.

May I dwell a little further on that point. The whole debacle was made even worse by the fact that the chief revenue officer responsible for collecting the community charge was suspended last September. Just before Christmas he was reinstated but was demoted to a lower grade, whereupon—not surprisingly—he left and his position is still vacant. Several other staff members were also suspended. Some were disciplined, some were sacked, and others left. Why did that happen, and why did those in authority let it happen, at such a crucial time? It happened because one of the staff made allegations of racism. Although I believe that allegations of racism should be looked into, we must also ask why they are made. That member of staff took offence at the picture of a chimpanzee on a wall. Apparently, the chimpanzee had been there for several years—rather longer than many members of staff.

Another important fact is rent arrears in council dwellings. That is germane because under the old rating system, rates were collected—or not collected—with the rent. Under the community charge, that becomes a separate item so that if tenants have become used to not paying their rent and therefore do not pay their rates, by logical extension they will want to get used to not paying their community charge. The London borough of Waltham Forest has a dreadful record in that respect. Arrears as a percentage of the rent roll stand at 18 per cent. and some £4 million are outstanding. That is the ninth worst record in the country. The council is always complaining about lack of resources, but if it collected those £4 million it could start to reduce its capital debt, which now stands at more than £150 million.

The headline in a local paper dated 10 July 1991 said:

"Row over Poll Tax Non-Payers—Labour councillor slams 'selfish' rebels and 'free-loading' residents."

The article says.

"A Labour councillor has made a stinging attack on fellow Socialist councillors who have been refusing to pay their poll tax. And Councillor Greg Hayman rebukes 'selfish' and 'free-loading' residents who think they can pull a fast one and escape paying the much criticised tax. Councillor Hayman has hit out because he has received many complaints from residents about the extra" money that the council

"has put on to this year's poll tax to make up for the shortfall created by non-payers last year."

He said that the extra surcharge was "simply not fair." The article continued that Councillor Hayman said:

"Some people have been jumping on the non-payment bandwagon because a few councillors, who should have known better, set a bad example. 'Any freeloaders, who think they can get away with it, will find that the council is not soft on non-payers.' Five Labour councillors have so far been prosecuted for not paying their poll tax . . . Cllr Hayman said: 'Just what were these councillors trying to prove? They have certainly not helped those conscientious people who are struggling to pay their poll tax and certainly not the borough's pensioners who still have to pay one-fifth of the poll tax. 'The actions of these councillors and other non-payers was totally selfish because cuts are now being made which affect residents who need to use the services we provide. If we don't collect the money, we have to cut services as well as putting up the poll tax.' Cllr Hayman said councillors who have still not paid up should resign from the Labour group. He is considering ways of forcing non-paying councillors to stand down. At least two of the rebels have yet to pay the poll tax even after they were taken to court."

That article was in the Islington Chronicle. There seems to be a mild outburst of realism and common sense in one small section of the Labour party. Let us hope that it spreads from Islington to Waltham Forest, although so far it has shown no signs of doing so. The hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) was sent to prison yesterday for not paying his poll tax.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Robert Key): Disgraceful.

Mr. Summerson: As my hon. Friend says, that non-payment was disgraceful—and what an example to set. Are we law makers in this place or law breakers? The hon. Member for Broadgreen certainly learnt the lesson that if one breaks the law, one must pay the penalty.

I am well aware of the difficulties of collecting the community charge, but I am also aware that many conscientious and public-spirited people—the majority—have paid their poll tax and resent enormously the imposition of a huge surcharge as a result of Waltham Forest council failing to collect a reasonable proportion of last year's community charge and of Labour councillors and Members of Parliament, by their example, encouraging non-payment.

What is to be done? I have three suggestions. First, those elected councillors who have publicly announced that they will defy the law should be held responsible, not only for their own non-payment, but the non-payment of others. They should be surcharged and disqualified from office. Secondly, a list of payers and non-payers should be published so that people can see who have paid their dues and who have not. Thirdly, there should be more stipendiary magistrates. Those who organised the "Can't pay won't pay" campaign knew very well what they were about when they urged as many non-payers as possible to turn up at court—the idea being to block the system. They should not be allowed to succeed.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will consider those suggestions carefully, as my constituents are crying out for redress. I hope that he will also take this opportunity to condemn those Labour councillors who publicly announced last year that they would refuse to pay the community charge, thus heaping an even greater burden on my constituents this year.

2.43 pm

Mr. Norman Tebbit (Chingford): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) on using this Adjournment debate to raise an important issue which affects his constituents and mine. It also affects the constituents of the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), who is not here—perhaps because he could not speak on the matter without shame at his record.

This is a disgraceful matter, and I have received many letters from my constituents who are deeply upset and question the legality of a process by which they are called upon to pay the debts of others who wilfully refuse to pay. As my hon. Friend the Minister will explain, that is the law and there is no other option, but it is deeply regrettable that this should have occurred.

As my hon. Friend said, the administration of the local authority is a total shambles. He might also have mentioned, with good cause, the disgraceful state of affairs in the social services department. Many of our constituents and, I am sure, many constituents in Leyton are left without the services that they should have, not because of a shortage of money, but because of an administrative shambles and a gross waste of money.

It is a sad thought that if the council's collection rate is as bad in the current year as it was in the year just ended, there will be a further surcharge of about £12·50 in respect of the uncollected £50 surcharge from this year. That is a measure of the scandalous waste, the scandalous politicking and the scandalous shambles of this council. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will take up all the suggestions made by my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow and that he will act on the matter. Something must be done.

2·45 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Robert Key): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) on his success in being able to raise this important issue on the Adjournment. Following his question to my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities last Wednesday, it is yet another example of his commitment to ensure that his constituents' concerns are voiced in the House. Those constituents are very well served by him and by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford (Mr. Tebbit), whom I am delighted to see speaking in support of my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow.

My right hon. Friend is right. The most destructive kind of politicking goes on in authorities such as Waltham Forest. It is not as if the authority is typical of many Labour authorities. Will the Labour party suggest that Labour authorities that manage to collect the community charge should be disregarded or expelled, as the lunatics, who now appear to be unpopular, have been? Of the best four authorities in terms of collection charge record, two are Labour—Cannock Chase and Copeland. Cannock Chase has managed to collect 110 per cent. of its charge and Copeland has managed to collect 105 per cent. of its charge. The Labour party needs to get its act together.

Before dealing with my hon. Friend's specific concerns, I should like to set out some background on the level of charges, billing arrangements and enforcement. The Government accepted earlier this year that the burden of taxation falling on local community charge payers was too high. The Chancellor took steps in his Budget to redress the balance. This year, therefore, only 15 per cent. of the cost of local services is met directly by community charge payers, with more of the burden shared nationally through the increase in value added tax. This was reflected in a £140 reduction in the headline community charge. We have held down the charges of the highest spenders through capping. In addition, we have significantly improved the relief available to those whose community charge bills taken at household level were higher than their old rates bill. This year, a couple should pay no more than £52 in combined community charge above the total of the 1989-90 rates bill for the household. Each additional adult is required to contribute only an extra £52. In this way, we have brought down the average community charge payable to £215. We believe that that is affordable. For those on income support and benefit, effective assistance remains in place.

At the same time, we believe that the arrangements for billing people are fair and reasonable. Everybody has a statutory right to pay the community charge in manageable instalments. Nobody becomes liable to pay the community charge until he or she receives a demand notice from the charging authority in whose area he or she is resident. When he or she gets the bill, the charge payer is given a specified date, no sooner than 14 days after the issue of the Bill, by which he or she should pay the first instalment. If the charge payer does not meet that instalment, he or she is given a number of further opportunities to pay.

[Mr. Robert Key]

A first reminder notice is issued, requiring the outstanding amount to be paid within seven days. After this, the authority may also issue a second reminder notice, but it is under no obligation to do so. Our regulations ensure that a charge payer is given at least two and possibly three opportunities to pay his or her community charge instalment. There is a further step before the local authority has to consider enforcement action. If he or she fails to pay the first instalment following the issue of reminders, the charge payer becomes liable to pay the authority the full amount of the community charge for the whole year. He or she has a further seven days in which to pay.

We believe that the charges set this year are affordable and that charge payers are given every opportunity to pay them in a manageable way. There can therefore be no excuse whatever for non-payment, and let me make it very clear that there will be no amnesty for non-payers.

Sadly, there has been significant non-payment. To deal with that we provided local authorities with wide powers to take enforcement action to recover sums due. This procedure starts when the council applies to a magistrates court for a summons to require a person involved to attend a court to explain to the magistrate why he or she had not paid the charge. If the Bill and the reminder have been issued in accordance with the regulations and the person cannot show good cause why the required sum has not been paid, the magistrate will issue a liability order to the council so that it can take action. This order covers both the community charge payable and the costs incurred by the charging authority and the court in obtaining and issuing the order.

We have seen to it that local authorities have stronger and wider powers to recover sums due than they did in relation to the old domestic rates. Local authorities may use distress, with bailiffs removing and selling goods to the value for the debt and their own fees. In addition, we have given authorities the power to attach a defaulter's earnings or to require the Department of Social Security to make deductions from his or her income support payments. These are powerful instruments and, of course, ultimately there remains the possibility of imprisonment for persistent and wilful non-payers.

Most authorities use bailiffs as their first port of call in enforcing the community charge. It is important that the activities of bailiffs are subject to fair but stringent controls. I know that local authorities have individual codes of practice. It is, of course, the isolated instances when something goes wrong that attract the media attention.

My Department has been told by the Institute of Revenues, Rating and Valuation that it aims to establish a national code of practice to cover bailiffs work on collecting the community charge. It aims to have this code agreed between the local authority associations, the Certificated Bailiffs Association and consumer groups, such as the National Consumer Council. There is a great merit in that suggestion and I urge all parties involved to do their utmost to ensure that a code of practice agreeable to to all parties emerges from these discussions as soon as possible.

If authorities use their powers to the full extent, they will be able to recover the charge from people who have not made payment. I acknowledge that last year when enforcement proceedings started some authorities had difficulty getting sufficient magistrates court time to hear the necessary amount of summonses. That situation is much improved and most authorities have reached agreement with their local court. We are greatly indebted to our magistrates for taking on this task in addition to their already heavy agenda of duties. I note what my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow said about the need for more magistrates, especially stipendiary magistrates. I shall draw that to the attention of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Against that background, how is collection going nationally? We have yet to see the local authorities' returns for the first quarter of this financial year. Returns received from local authorities at the end of the last financial year showed that in England authorities had on average received 90 per cent. of the community charge they expected to collect. That is, of course, an average—some did better and some worse. As an average, it is somewhat lower than what was achieved under the old domestic rates. But it is not a lot lower and it is far from being the horror story that we usually read about in the press.

Looking at individual authorities' records, it is no surprise to find that responsible boroughs such as Westminster have a considerably better collection record than for instance Lambeth, and Islington which my hon. Friend mentioned.

It may help if I say a little about how Waltham Forest fared in this year's revenue support grant settlement. As my right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford and my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow will know, it did well. Its standard spending assessment rose by nearly 21 per cent. to £194·1 million and its external support—grant—and non-domestic rate income rose, before taking account of community charge reduction grant, to £160·2 million, an increase of nearly 20 per cent. which is the equivalent of £998 for each adult in the borough of Walthamstow. That is a remarkable amount for each taxpayer to share with the people of that borough.

The community charge originally set by Waltham Forest in 1991-92 was £437, almost the same as in the previous year. The headline charge was reduced to £297 by the Government's general reduction of £140. So in my hon. Friend's borough, as in the rest of the country, people are paying substantially less in community charge thanks to the Government's decision to shift the burden of local spending away from charge payers.

I shall now move on to the specific points raised by my hon. Friend. He was most concerned about the size of losses on collection in his own authority and others which were being passed on to law-abiding community charge payers to meet. I have every sympathy with him. Such losses should not arise. First, it is unlawful and irresponsible for individuals to withhold individual community charge payments, and to attempt to transfer the burden of payment on to those who are rightly making their contribution. That is simply unreasonable. Secondly, as I outlined earlier, we have given authorities very substantial powers to enforce payment of the community charge. If authorities use those powers effectively, they can keep uncollectable losses to an absolute minimum.

I agree that substantial allowances for uncollected charges are unacceptable. Nevertheless, where there are such uncollectable charges, the local authority has a duty to make allowances for the amount of debt that it will not be able to recover and then set a community charge that takes this into account. I understand and sympathise with those who feel that it is unreasonable to pay for the losses created by the non-payment of others, but they should not break the law themselves. All charge payers are under a legal duty to pay the community charge set by their authority. The element in the bill for uncollected community charge forms part of that charge and charge payers must pay it, as my right hon. Friend the Member for Chingford said.

I fear that it is a general rule of life that the law-abiding pay extra to make up for the behaviour of the feckless, the irresponsible or the criminal. Ask the manager of any High street store how much lower prices would be if it were not for theft and pilfering.

My hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow then mentioned the case of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields). I find it beyond comprehension that someone who was elected to represent his constituents in the House should behave in such an irresponsible manner. As the leader of his party pointed out, Members of Parliament are elected to make the laws, not to break them. The chairman of Bootle magistrates clearly took a serious view of this when he imprisoned the hon. Member for Broadgreen for 60 days. The hon. Gentleman has set an appalling example, and I hope that this does not lead to other people following his irresponsible action.

I understand that the Freedom Association has sent the Labour party a cheque with which to pay the bill of the hon. Member for Broadgreen but that the Labour party has rejected it. Labour wants to wash its hands of this. I have some advice for the Labour party, which I am glad to see is represented by one of its hon. Members. It will continue to lose credibility in the House and outside until it disowns all hon. Members who do not pay their community charge.

We have recently looked at the provisions for the surcharge and disqualification of councillors in the context of the Widdicombe committee's recommendations and concluded that the provisions were already sufficiently stringent.

Payment of the community charge will remain an important issue this year and next, but perhaps I can end by looking to the future. We have, of course, announced that the community charge will be replaced by the council tax. We have recently completed wide consultations on the new tax and we are currently considering responses to that consultation very carefully. We shall make clear the next steps in due course. Ease of administration and collection have been two of the key factors in designing the council tax. We believe that the proposals that we have put forward will meet all our objectives in this area while maintaining fairness and accountability.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow on raising this important issue on the Floor of the House. I repeat what I said at the beginning—his constituents are fortunate to be represented by so diligent a Member.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at two minutes to Three o'clock.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Official Files

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Attorney-General what guidelines cover the circumstances in which official files held by Departments may be destroyed; and what changes have taken place in these guidelines in the last 20 years.

The Attorney-General: The framework within which records of Government Departments are selected for permanent preservation is that recommended in the report of the Grigg committee in 1954 (Cmd. 9163) and accepted by the Government in 1955. The Public Record Office issues guidelines to Departments on the procedures to be followed and on the general criteria for selection. These guidelines are kept under review by the Public Record Office and were last updated in 1983.

Section 3(6) of the Public Records Act 1958 provides that records that have been rejected as not required for permanent preservation shall be destroyed unless the approval of the Lord Chancellor has been obtained for their disposal in some other way.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total Government expenditure on funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for 1990-91, itemised by borough and district and identifying for each borough and district the amount of education expenditure for that financial year.

Mrs. Rumbold: The following local authorities received grant, at the rate of 75 per cent. of salary costs, under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 in the financial year 1990-91.

Precise figures for the amount of grant paid for education expenditure to each authority are not available. It is estimated, however, that education provision accounts for approximately 80 per cent. of total grant.

Civil Damages

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the total amount paid out by police authorities for civil damages since 1982.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Compensation paid out by police authorities for civil damages under section 48 (2) b of the Police Act 1964 is a matter for the police authority concerned and there is therefore no central record of the total amount paid out by police authorities.

Wrongful Imprisonment

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to improve the machinery that exists for paying compensation to people who have been wrongly imprisoned and are subsequently released; and whether he has any plans to provide compensation to people whose close relatives are wrongly imprisoned.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans at present to amend the existing arrangements under section 133 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988, or under the ex-gratia scheme, for the payment of compensation to those who have been imprisoned as a result of a wrongful conviction.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: By the end of the current financial year, my Department expects to have spent £1 million on television advertising for fire safety and £2·2 million on television advertising for crime prevention.

Non-television publicity campaigns costing more than £100,000 are:

THE ARTS

Arts Funding (London)

33. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has made arrangements to meet representatives of the Association of London Authorities and London Boroughs Association to discuss arts funding in London.

Mr. Renton: I have made arrangements to meet the Association of London Authorities on 25 July. The London Boroughs Association has asked to explore the issues with my officials, and a meeting has been arranged for 8 July.

Museums (Admission Charges)

34. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his most recent assessment of the effects of admission charges to museums introduced in the past four years.

Mr. Renton: Those museums where admission charges have been introduced have reported that, after dropping initially, attendances have generally picked up, and in many cases, have returned to previous levels. Figures recorded before the introduction of admission charges cannot however be regarded as wholly reliable.

Arts Provision (Wales)

35. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will meet local authority leaders to discuss arts provision in Wales.

Mr. Renton: I have no plans to do so. However, I met the chairman and senior officers of the Welsh Arts Council in Cardiff recently, and they hold annual meetings with representatives of the local authorities in Wales.

Arts Spending (London)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the average spending on the arts across London boroughs during the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Local authority arts funding is discretionary and there is no central reporting requirement. I am afraid that the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Service Morale

41. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is proposing to take to improve morale in the civil service.

Mr. Renton: Our aim is to have an efficient, effective and well-motivated civil service.

Community Institutions

Mr. Moate: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is taking to increase the number of United Kingdom secondees to Community institutions.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington).

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister if he will meet Mr. Kenneth McGinley, chairman of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) on 18 April 1991 at column 568.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxpayers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1991-92 the number of basic rate and higher rate taxpayers with earned incomes above the national insurance contribution upper earnings limit, giving figures separately for (a) husbands, (b) wives, (c) single men and (d) single women and distinguishing between pensioners and non-pensioners.

Mr. Maude: The latest estimates in respect of 1991-92 are given in the table on two bases depending on the scope of earned income. The first basis compares the annual equivalent of the NIC upper earnings limit—UEL—with the total of earnings from employment and self-employment for those subject to NIC. The second basis compares the UEL with total earned income, including pensions and taxable benefits in kind, for all individuals.

Millions

	Taxpaying individuals with earnings subject to NIC above the UEL			Taxpaying individuals with total earned income above the UEL
	Basic rate only	Higher rate	Total	Basic rate only	Higher rate	Total
Taxpayers aged under 65:
Husbands	1·4	1·1	2·5	1·5	1·1	2·6
Wives	0·1	0·1	0·2	0·1	0·1	0·2
Single men	0·3	0·2	0·5	0·3	0·2	0·5
Single women	0·2	0·0	0·2	0·2	0·1	0·3
Total	2·0	1·4	3·4	2·1	1·6	3·7

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for 1991-92 the number of top rate taxpayers with (a) gross and (b) taxable incomes within the following income ranges (i) £23,700 to £27,700, (ii) £27,000 to £30,000, (iii) £30,000 to £35,000, (iv) £35,000 to £40,000, (v) £40,000 to £45,000, (vi) £45,000 to £50,000, (vii) £50,000 to £55,000, (viii) £55,000 to £60,000 and (ix) over £60,000.

Mr. Maude: Since mortgage interest is not to be deductible at the higher rate for 1991-92 it is appropriate to analyse higher rate taxpayers by range of income after deducting allowances and reliefs excluding mortgage interest.

The latest estimates are as follows:

Total income for income tax purposes £ per year	Number of higher rate taxpayers in 1991-92 Thousands
23,700–27,700	10

[1] Excluding mortgage interest.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of taxpayers in 1991-92 who have taxable incomes of less than £2,000, giving figures separately for single people, husbands and wives.

Mr. Maude: The latest estimates of taxpayers with taxable incomes in 1991-92 of less than £2,000 are as follows:

	Million
Single people	1·9
Husbands	1·2
Wives	1·6
TOTAL	4·7

Taxable income is income subject to tax from all sources after deducting allowances and reliefs.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), of 2 May, Official Report, column 301, if he will publish the figures on the same basis showing separately average allowances and reliefs claimed against tax due under (a) schedule E and (b) schedule D.

Mr. Maude: Taxpayers can be analysed according to whether they have a main source of income taxed under schedule E. Latest estimates for 1990-91 are as follows:

Taxpayers with a main source of income from employment or from an occupational pension

Gross income £ per year	Amount of tax reliefs and allowances set against income £
0 to 5,000	3,200
5,000 to 10,000	4,200
10,000 to 15,000	5,300
15,000 to 20,000	6,300
20,000 to 25,000	7,100
25,000 to 30,000	7,500
30,000 to 40,000	7,700

5,000 to 10,000	4,500
10,000 to 15,000	5,500
15,000 to 20,000	6,100
20,000 to 25,000	6,600
25,000 to 30,000	6,600
30,000 to 40,000	7,100
40,000 to 50,000	8,300
over 50,000	12,100
Average	5,300

Income Tax

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the same basis as his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 354, concerning the effect of an upper limit on all income tax allowances and reliefs, if he will estimate the net effect of these options, assuming that all reliefs and allowances are limited to the basic rate of income tax.

Mr. Maude: It is estimated that, at 1991-92 levels of income, restricting all allowances and reliefs to the basic rate of income tax would yield about £2·2 billion. The additional yield from introducing upper limits of £10,000, £15,000 and £20,000 would be about £450 million, £150 million and £100 million, respectively, in a full year. The estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the changes.

Lost Revenue

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated lost revenue to the Exchequer from employers not paying tax and national insurance contributions for (a) 1988, (b) 1989 and (c) 1990.

Mr. Maude: The amounts of PAYE tax and class 1 national insurance contributions remitted or written off as irrecoverable in the accounts years to the end of October were as follows—

	PAYE (£ million)	NIC Class 1 (£ million)
1988	130·7	15·9
1989	122·9	15·1
1990[1]	107·1	17·3

[1] Provisional.

Public Information

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many applications the Public Records Office has received in each year since 1977 for the file T160/763/F14755; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Public Records Office does not hold records of aplications for files which are not in its keeping.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 20 June, Official Report, column 313, what information he has on the means by which file T160/763/F14755 was destroyed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Treasury records show only that the file was reviewed in 1977 and destroyed.

National Insurance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) employees and (b) self-employed people have earned income above the upper earnings limit for national insurance contributions, distinguishing between basic rate and higher rate taxpayers.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 27 June 1991]: Latest estimates for 1991-92 are as follows:

Individual taxpayers aged under 65 with annual earnings[1] above the UEL

(millions)

Main source of earnings :	Basic rate taxpayer	Higher rate taxpayer	Total
Employment	1·9	1·1	3·0
Self-employment	0·1	0·3	0·4
Total	2·0	1·4	3·4

[1] Earnings subject to NIC from employment and self-employment.

The main source of earnings is as indicated in Inland Revenue administrative records for tax collection purposes. Taxpayers with substantial income from both sources are included in the "employment" category.

TRANSPORT

Regional Airports

13. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage the development of regional airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: Our liberalisation policies, both in the European Community and in bilateral negotiations, are increasing the scope for regional air services and we are facilitating development at local authority airports by issuing credit approvals, particularly for the first phase of Manchester's second terminal.

Railway Electrification

14. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on investment approval for railway electrification.

Mr. Freeman: We welcome worthwhile proposals for investment, including electrification, from British Rail. Proposals naturally have to be good value for money and affordable.

Freight Transport

15. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss the establishment of freight terminals for onward transport of freight to the channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The establishment of freight terminals for channel tunnel traffic is a commercial matter for British Rail, and does not require the Government's approval. British Rail keeps the Government fully informed of progress in preparing for the commencement of channel tunnel freight services.

Bus Deregulation

16. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his present proposals are for the deregulation of buses in London.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's proposals for the deregulation of buses in London were set out in the consultation paper "A Bus Strategy for London" issued in March. We have received more than 200 responses to that paper which are currently being assessed. An announcement on the Government's conclusions following the consultation exercise will be made shortly.

British Rail

17. Mr. Samberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what legislative changes he proposes following his recent speech on the future of British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We shall be working with British Rail and the private sector to identify further practical measures to encourage rail freight that could be brought forward without legislation. Our plans to give new operators a right of access to British Rail track will need legislation in due course.

London Channel Tunnel Group

18. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received a request to meet representatives of the London channel tunnel group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. We are well aware of the support from this group of London boroughs for an easterly approach to Stratford for the rail link. My right hon. and learned Friend has told the group that he is not undertaking consultations himself, but that it will be for British Rail to consult once a preferred route is announced.

Chelmsford-Liverpool Street Line

19. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss British Rail's investment plans on the Chelmsford to Liverpool Street line.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend has regular meetings with the chairman of British Rail at which they discuss a wide range of issues.

Air Traffic Control

20. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to make any representations to his French counterpart on the operation of air traffic control on flights between London and Paris; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Industrial action by air traffic controllers in Paris has caused substantial delays to flights recently. The United Kingdom national air traffic services are in daily contact with their French counterparts to help relieve the situation. It is for the French authorities to resolve their own industrial relations problems.

Road and Rail Expenditure

21. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much spending on road and rail increased (a) since 1979 and (b) between 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1979 investment on road and rail in Great Britain has increased by about two thirds in real terms. Between 1974 and 1979, it fell by about a third in real terms.

M4 (Deaths)

22. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many fatal injuries have been recorded on the M4 in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chope: The number of people killed each year on the M4 motorway during the seven years 1983 to 1989, the period for which figures are readily available, was respectively: 29, 19, 24, 39, 33, 28 and 24.

Rail Privatisation

23. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which country he proposes to take as a model for his proposals in railway privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We believe that the privatisation of British Rail will be the model for other countries.

Transport Delays

24. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the cost of transport delays due to congestion, roadworks or breakdowns during 1990.

Mr. Rifkind: We are taking a wide range of measures to deal with congestion, including substantial investment in public transport, roads and traffic management. There are no reliable estimates of the total costs of congestion, but they are clearly large.

England-Scotland Road Links

25. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to improve road links between north-east England and Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Department has a number of schemes in the current road programme which will improve links between north-east England and Scotland.

On the A1 north of Morpeth there are dual carriageway proposals at Brownieside and Marshall Meadows to the Scottish border.

Improvements to the A66 and A69 which link with the west coast routes to Scotland are also planned. These are at Temple Sowerby, Stainburn to Great Clifton and Stainmore to Banksgate on the A66 and the Haltwhistle on the A69.

Work on a dualling scheme between Bowes and the Durham/Cumbria boundary on the A66 is due to be completed by autumn 1992 and the A69 Brampton bypass was opened on 18 April 1991.

The preferred route for the extension of M6 Carlisle to near the border with Scotland was announced on 13 June 1991. Together with proposals by the Scottish Office, it will complete a motorway link to Glasgow.

All of these schemes have made, or will make a significant contribution to improving road links between the north-east and Scotland.

European Air Services

26. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the liberalisation of European air services in the last six months.

Mr. McLoughlin: The EC Transport Council in March agreed a proposal introducing a mechanism to enable swift action to be taken in cases of predatory practices by airlines. This is a vital ingredient of the single market. Two other EC regulations have also now taken effect: one which further liberalises arrangements for Community air cargo services, and one which sets minimum levels of denied boarding compensation for passengers. We now await the Commission's proposals for the final stage of liberalisation, which we understand will be put forward shortly.

Casualty Rates

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the rates and trends of European countries' road deaths and serious injuries since the beginning of 1987.

Mr. Chope: The definition of serious injury varies considerably between different countries. It is therefore not possible to make meaningful comparisons. The table gives information on road deaths in European Community countries taken from the United Nations Economic Council for Europe—ECE—publication "Statistics of road traffic accidents in Europe" for 1987, 1988 and 1989. The standard international definition of a fatality is where death occurs within 30 days of a road accident. Figures for those countries which use a different definition have been adjusted according to scaling factors used by the ECE.

Children in Cars

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current rear seat occupancy rate by children in cars in traffic.

Mr. Chope: Observations from a Transport and Road Research Laboratory survey of seat belt wearing carried out in April indicate that 10 per cent. of cars contain rear seat passengers under the age of 14 years.

Transport 2000 Seminar

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will be represented at the seminar, "Transport; Roads for Development or Exploitation," organised by Transport 2000 at Westminster Central hall on 13 July.

Mr. Chope: No.

Seat Belts

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his plans to monitor the effectiveness of compulsory rear seat belt wearing for adults which comes into effect on 1 July.

Mr. Chope: The roadside surveys of seat belt wearing carried out at six-monthly intervals by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory will monitor the change in wearing rates following introduction of the new law. In addition, the quarterly analysis by my Department of data from the road accident report forms completed by the police will reveal how effective the new law has been in reducing the number and severity of casualties among rear seat passengers.

Motor Cyclists

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further advice he will give to motor cyclists following the publication of "Your Driving Test and Driving".

Mr. Chope: I am pleased to announce that the Driving Standards Agency has produced an official reference book for motor cycle riders which will be published today. It covers a wide variety of subjects including all aspects of riding technique with particular emphasis on defensive riding, equipment, legal requirements, details of compulsory basic training, the motor cycle test and basic maintenance. The book will cost £6·95 and will be available from HMSO agents and high street bookstores. I am placing copies in the Library.

Buses (London)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many buses are currently being operated in the Greater London area; what the figures were 10 and 15 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: London Transport tells me that, excluding Green Line routes, there are currently 4,910 buses in the Greater London area operated by London Buses Ltd. or under agreement with, or under contract to, London Transport. The figures for 10 and 15 years ago were 5,094 and 5,611 respectively. The figure of 4,910 does not include buses operated under London local service licences.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the study, "The Hex Connection: Some Problems and Hazards Associated with the Transportation of Uranium Hexafluoride", by Dr. Miles Goldstick, published by the Swedish University of Agricultural Sciences, Uppsala, in April.

Mr. McLoughlin: This publication is currently on order.

Transport Act 1985

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has conducted a recent survey on the effect of the Transport Act 1985 on off-peak and Sunday services.

Mr. McLoughlin: There has been no recent survey of off-peak and Sunday services.

London Transport (MMC Report)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on London Transport.

Mr. Freeman: None. I have however received one letter supporting an article which appeared in the Financial Times of 6 June about the MMC report, which called for more investment in the underground.

Road Signs

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those counties in England for which there are no motorway or trunk road signs to their principal towns.

Mr. Chope: The Isle of Wight is unique among English counties in this respect.

Fuel Efficiency

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research has been undertaken by his Department to evaluate the effectiveness of corporate average fuel efficiency standards for motor vehicle manufacturers; and if he will introduce such standards in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 24 June 1991]: The Department has examined the impact of the United States corporate average fuel efficiency scheme. Although the scheme has improved overall fuel economy within the vehicle fleet in the United States of America, it is generally acknowledged to be a regulatory measure made necessary by the very low gasoline prices in the United States of America.

The Government are working with the EC to ensure that if any measures are taken to regulate fuel economy, they are sensible and effective.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the European Commission about the environmental impact of the east London river crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 June 1991]: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no discussions with the European Commission about the east London river crossing. An official response to a letter from the Commission about the scheme was sent in December 1989.

Red Routes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the nearest proposed red route to Leyton and Leytonstone.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 27 June 1991]: The priority red route network will be based largely on the primary route network in London, as indicated in the discussion document "Traffic in London". Copies of this document were placed in the Library in December 1989.

It is likely therefore that the nearest routes to Leyton and Leytonstone will be the A106 and A11, but decisions will be taken only after consultation in accordance with the provisions of the Road Traffic Bill.

Pontypool-Newport Line

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what investment proposals he has received from British Rail to improve services on the Pontypool to Newport line.

Mr. McLoughlin: British Rail has not proposed any investment for the Pontypool to Newport line.

Networker Express Trains

Mr. Monte: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress there has been towards approving investment in the new Networker express rolling stock for the Kent coast services of British Rail.

Mr. Rifkind: Investment priorities are a matter for British Rail. It has recently submitted a strategy document for this rolling stock to my Department. My officials are discussing it with the board. More work needs to be done by BR before a formal investment case can be presented.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditing Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the functions of the recognised supervisory bodies to be created under the Companies Act 1989 in respect of disciplining (a) auditing firms and (b) individual partners in auditing firms.

Mr. Redwood: Under paragraph 10(1) of Schedule 11 to the Act, a recognised supervisory body must have inter alia adequate arrangements and resources for the effective enforcement of compliance with its rules. This could entail disciplinary action against individual partners as well as against the audit firm itself.

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the names of the bodies to which complaints may be made about the behaviour and conduct of the recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Redwood: Complaints should be made to the body itself. Paragraph 12 of schedule 11 to the Companies Act 1989 requires a recognised supervisory body for company auditors to have effective arrangements for the investigation of complaints against the body in respect of matters arising out of its functions as a supervisory body. I would expect such arrangements to include independent or lay involvement in the investigation.

In addition, under the Act the Secretary of State will have a continuing role in ensuring that recognised supervisory bodies satisfy the criteria for recognition, and he would therefore have an interest in complaints about their behaviour and conduct.

Financial Reporting Review Panel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will propose legislation, specifying the time limit within which the financial reporting review panel will be required to respond to a complaint.

Mr. Redwood: It was one of the preconditions for authorising the financial reporting review panel under section 245C of the Companies Act 1985 for the purposes of section 245B of the Act that the panel appeared to my right hon. Friend to have satisfactory procedures for receiving and investigating complaints. The panel's procedures were published on 27 June and a copy has been placed in the library.

Accountancy Practices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to introduce regulations under which all the members of the accountancy profession would have equal access to information relating to the Auditing Standards Board.

Mr. Redwood: It is for the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies and the Auditing Practices Board, as appropriate, to determine their policy on access to information about the board.

Catering

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the Federation of Catering Equipment Suppliers.

Mr. Leigh: I would consider sympathetically any such request.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases the Insolvency Service has investigated in Yorkshire in the last 12 months for which statistics are kept; for what reasons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Although statistics are not kept on a county basis, all cases except summary administrations are inquired into by official receivers of the Insolvency Service and where the circumstances of the insolvency require are subject to further investigation. As a result of those investigations, during the year ended 31 March 1991, official receivers covering the Yorkshire area, which would also include parts of adjoining counties, submitted 209 reports alleging either the commission of possible criminal offences or recommending application be made for the disqualification of directors whose conduct appears to make them unfit to be concerned in the management of limited companies. As at 30 June 1991, there were 191 cases under investigation by those official receivers.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many officials in the Yorkshire offices of the Insolvency Service are qualified in (a) law and (b) accountancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The latest figures available show that 29 officials in the Yorkshire offices of the Insolvency Service have studied for accountancy or allied qualifications. Of these, three are fully qualified, one will shortly be sitting her final examinations and others are still studying. None of these officers has a law degree and such legal expertise as is required is provided by the solicitors division of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Gold and Silver

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effect of the single European market in respect of consumer protection on the purchase of items made from gold and silver.

Mr. Leigh: There are no proposals at present to introduce a Communitywide system of marking precious metals so the completion of the single European market will not in itself have any effect on the legislation currently in force in the United Kingdom and the other member states in this area. It will, however, be necessary at some stage to establish a common regime for precious metals in the European Community. The Government have made it clear that they regard the compulsory marking of articles of precious metals as essential to protect both purchasers and the trade and that the United Kingdom hallmarking system is the best means of ensuring this.

Medicines

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of representations from the manufacturers of generic medicines on the issue of supplementary protection certificates for medicinal products were in favour of the European Commission's proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: The representations received from the manufacturers of generic medicines have covered a range of views. None has given unqualified support to the Commission's proposal; indeed, some have not favoured any supplementary protection. Most, however, have recognised the case for some supplementary protection, but have advocated a shorter period or have suggested other provisions to offset the effect of supplementary protection on generics manufacturers.

Whitbread (Tenancy Agreements)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what moves he is making to collect evidence on the way in which Whitbread is using notices to quit to enforce tenancy agreements with licensed victuallers.

Mr. Redwood: The Secretary of State has made it clear that the issuing of notices to quit is not necessarily to comply with the beer orders. He has met Whitbread to urge the company to keep the number of notices to quit to an absolute minimum. The renegotiation of tenancy agreements is of course a commercial matter between the landlords and their tenants. However Whitbread has been asked to keep my Department informed of progress, including about the number of notices it sends to tenants.

Premium Rate Phone Services

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the Office of Telecommunications about the establishment of a compensation scheme in respect of recorded premium telephone services.

Mr. Redwood: The issue of compensation schemes in respect of premium rate telephone services was considered by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in 1989. Its report recommended that such a scheme should be introduced for chatlines. This scheme is now in operation and also includes other live services. It was not recommended that it should include recorded services. I have not held any recent discussions with OFTEL about extending the scheme in this way.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Leigh: The Department has no immediate plans for further television advertising. In the current financial year publicity activities in support of the following elements of departmental programmes are expected to cost more than £100,000:

Enterprise Initiative
Single European Market
Export Promotion
Innovation, Research and Development
Managing into the 90s
Manufacturing Practice
Information Technology
Consumer Affairs
Business and the Environment
Inner Cities
The Queen's Awards for Export and Technology
UK Space Interests
Deregulation
Inward Investment (Overseas Publicity)
Staff Recruitment

This list excludes expenditure on the day-to-day marketing of services by the Department's executive agencies.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of jobs in the footwear and textile and related industries liable to be lost if the multi-fibre arrangement were abolished.

Mr. Sainsbury: Professor Silberston's independent study for my Department, published in October 1989, estimated that an immediate rather than phased ending of the multi-fibre arrangement could lead to between 16,500 and 33,000 job losses in the United Kingdom textiles and clothing industry, with the lower estimate being the more realistic figure. The study also estimated that the MFA cost United Kingdom consumers £980 million a year at 1988 prices. With minor exceptions, the multi-fibre arrangement does not cover footwear products.

ECGD Insurance Services Group

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the proposed privatisation of the short-term business of the Export Credits Guarantee Department currently operated by the Insurance Services Group.

Mr. Lilley: Preparatory work for the privatisation has been taking place for some time. Parliament has been informed of progress as the sale of this business is subject to the completion of the passage of the Export and Investment Guarantees Bill through both Houses of Parliament.

An invitation to tender was issued in early March and I have now completed a thorough review of the responses. I have paid particular attention to the bidders' commitment to, and understanding of, the business, the financial robustness of the proposals, the future business plans and the likely acceptability of the bidder to customers and to staff, as well as to price. In the light of this review, I have selected NCM as the preferred purchaser of the business. This selection is, of course, subject to contract and there will now be a period of detailed negotiations between the Government and the company.

I am confident that the proposed transfer of the business to the private sector will provide United Kingdom exporters with access to a more comprehensive and efficient service than will be possible from within a public sector environment. The Government will continue to provide support for the business through the proposed reinsurance arrangements with the new company, including the "national interest facility" which will continue, subject to satisfactory financial performance, for as long as the Government consider it essential to meet the reasonable needs of exporters.

Simpler Trade Procedures Board

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the operation of his Department's Simpler Trade Procedures Board and its electronic data interchange facility since it was established.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 25 June 1991]: The Simpler Trade Procedures Board (SITPRO) is a non-departmental public body supported by my Department. SITPRO's main objectives are the elimination of unnecessary procedural barriers to international trade and the provision of impartial advice to British exporters on procedural aspects of exporting. SITPRO is a world leader in the development of international standards for electronic data interchange.

Czech and Slovak Federal Republic

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what current initiatives are under way sponsored by his Department to increase trade and enterprise in and with the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 June 1991]: Overseas trade services staff in the United Kingdom and Prague provide a range of services to encourage trade with and enterprise in Czechoslovakia. A DTI official is on secondment to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office to help administer the know-how fund's schemes to assist longer-term investments in eligible countries, including Czechoslovakia.

Food Imports

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the United Kingdom's trade deficit with the rest of the EEC can be attributed to food imports.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom's net visible trade deficit with the European Community was £10·8 billion in 1990. The visible trade deficit in respect of food, feed and drink was £4·4 billion. It would be wrong to conclude from such figures that 41 per cent. of the deficit could be attributed to food: because some sectors have positive balances, the sum of the deficits will add to more than 100 per cent. Thus the deficit on machinery was 43 per cent., that on motor vehicles was 50 per cent. and that on miscellaneous goods was 27 per cent.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bangladesh

Mr. Miscampbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been given to Bangladesh in the last six months.

Mrs. Chalker: The most recent figures available for British aid to Bangladesh are for the financial year 1989-90 when £52·8 million was disbursed. Within the last six months, our assistance has also included an additional £11·5 million to help the Bangladesh people cope with the effects of the recent cyclone.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mercenaries

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he proposes to ratify the United Nations international convention against the recruitment, use, financing and training of mercenaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We did not sign the convention and therefore do not propose to ratify it. Implementation of the convention would require primary legislation. Following the consideration of the whole question by the Diplock committee, we decided not to introduce legislation on mercenaries. We still do not consider that the need for such legislation has been established.

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community's Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Fisheries Council will meet on 8 July and Ministers will discuss the 10th, 11th and 12th amendments to the conservation regulations and control methods in the North West Atlantic Fisheries Organisation regulatory area. Ministers may also discuss North sea and Celtic sea herring and Norwegian sand eels.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 8 July to conduct a multilateral surveillance of the economies of member states. Ministers may consider the formal adoption of the Commission's annual economic report and discuss further the investment services directive. Ministers may discuss European investment bank lending outside the Community with a view to examining the possibility of extending European invesment bank operations to other countries and regions and adopt a Council statement on the Commission's report on European Community fraud.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 15 and 16 July and Ministers will discuss the agricultural aspects of the GATT Uruguay round and food quality. Ministers may also discuss the welfare of animals during transport and reform of the common agricultural policy.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 22 July and Ministers may consider the Dutch presidency's proposed directive on sweeteners in foodstuffs, and three related proposals on the rational use of medicines. Ministers might also discuss the draft regulation to provide for a European company statute, and the second Diplomas Directive.

The Budget Council will meet on 25 July to consider the 1992 preliminary draft budget submitted by the Commission.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 29 and 30 July. Ministers are likely to discuss follow-up to the European Council on 28 and 29 June. Ministers may review the state of negotiations of association agreements with Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia and the question of European Community assistance to the Soviet Union. Ministers will discuss the European Community investment partners facility, an instrument designed to promote joint ventures in developing countries. The revision of the Commission's mandate for the negotiations between the European Community and Gulf Co-operation Council on a free trade agreement may be considered. Ministers will review progress in the EC/EFTA negotiations on a European economic area and may also examine EC/Turkey relations. There may also be a ministerial session on the intergovernmental conference on political union on 29 or 30 July.

The Gulf (Disappearances)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 635-36, what information he has received on the disappearance of the British TV journalist Rosanna Della Casa and on the deaths of Nick Della Casa and Charles Maxwell in the Turkish-Iraqi border region, from (a) Turkish authorities, (b) Iraqi authorities and (c) the commission to investigate the incident; and if he will make this information available to their next of kin.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have received the full co-operation of the Turkish authorities in our inquiries into the disappearance of Mrs. Rosanna della Casa and the deaths of Mr. Nicholas della Casa and Mr. Charles Maxwell. The Iraqi authorities have also said that they will co-operate. Investigations are continuing with the assistance of Scotland Yard. Next-of-kin are being kept informed at every stage.

"The Gulf Between Us: The Gulf War and Beyond"

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the study, "The Gulf Between Us: The Gulf War and Beyond", edited by Victoria Brittain.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Not at present. It will be ordered if it is required.

Arms Control Yearbook

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the 1991 "Yearbook on Arms Control and Environmental Agreements (Verification Report)" edited by J. B. Poole.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes.

National Union of Mineworkers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking in respect of the unauthorised release of information from Government communications headquarters or its outstations on the financial affairs of the National Union of Mineworkers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have nothing to add to the answer given to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 7 June, at column 367.

Guyana

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government are sending official observers from the United Kingdom to observe the elections in Guyana in October; what support (a) the United Nations and (b) the Commonwealth are giving in the conduct of the elections; and what contribution Her Majesty's Government are making towards the costs of such assistance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of Guyana have indicated that they will allow only official election observers from the Carter centre and the Commonwealth secretariat.

We have agreed to make a substantial contribution towards the costs of the Commonwealth observer mission, in line with the established formula governing contributions from Commonwealth member states to the Commonwealth secretariat's activities.

I have no information that the United Nations will play a role during the elections in Guyana.

A date for the elections has not yet been announced.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no plans to carry out a paid TV advertising campaign. The only domestic publicity campaign costing more than £100,000 that it will carry out is a continuing series of leaflets for British travellers explaining consular services abroad and giving general travel advice. The budget for this campaign in the present financial year is £200,000. Existing TV and radio publicity on the same theme is broadcast free as public service announcements and the FCO has no plans to produce new material at home.

The FCO has budgeted £12·4 million in the present financial year for publicity of various kinds overseas to promote Britain and in support of British Government policies.

Liaison Group of Anti-Apartheid Movements

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's response to the memorandum of the Liaison Group of Anti-Apartheid Movements of 10 June to the President of the Council of Ministers; and if Her Majesty's Government will support its being discussed at the Luxembourg summit.

Mrs. Chalker: EC Heads of Government discussed South Africa at Luxembourg as the right hon. Member will be aware. They welcomed the important progress made in South Africa towards the abolition of apartheid. They did not agree with the liaison group's recommendation that the EC should suspend its decision to lift some sanctions against South Africa.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Footpaths and Bridleways

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley of 4 June, Official Report, column 196, if he will make it his practice to keep central records of the number of public footpaths and public bridleways that have been created or closed to the general public.

Mr. Needham: Under the Access to the Countryside (NI) Order 1983 it is the responsibility of each district council to compile and preserve maps and other records of public rights of way in its district. It is not my intention to have the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland duplicate those records.

Maydown Incinerator

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he intends that the hazardous waste incinerator proposed for Maydown, County Londonderry will be no risk to the community or the environment.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 26 June 1991, Official Report, column 488.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further regulations he intends to introduce with respect to the control of substances hazardous to health in the proposed incinerator at Maydown, County Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: If the proposed incinerator came into operation, it would become subject to the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 and health and safety regulations made under the order. At present, the Department of Economic Development does not intend to introduce health and safety regulations with specific respect to the proposed facility.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research he has undertaken to determine whether the waste presently earmarked for incineration in the proposed plant at Maydown, Co. Londonderry, could be recycled by the producers of such waste.

Mr. Needham: The extent to which waste can be minimised and recycled will be central in the consideration by any company of the feasibility of an incinerator. High temperature incineration—without doubt, the most costly solution—will be considered only when it is clearly the only appropriate technology for disposal.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evaluation of the site of the proposed incinerator at Maydown will be, or has been, undertaken by (a) his Department and (b) other and independent bodies, to determine where in Northern Ireland any emissions would deposit in a wind speed of zero, five, 10, 15, 20, 30 and 40 mph blowing from the south to north west points of the compass.

Mr. Needham: If it decides to proceed with this proposal, Du Pont (UK) Ltd. would be obliged to submit a planning application which would be treated as a major application under article 22 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1972. The submission of an environmental statement with this application would be mandatory under the terms of EC directive 337/85 and the Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1989. As part of this environmental statement, the company would be required to carry out detailed mathematical modelling of the incinerator's emissions—a wide range of wind speeds would be used —and their impact on all compass points would be assessed. The company's submission would be critically examined by the alkali and radiochemical inspectorate of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. The Department has no information about the evaluation of this site by other and independent bodies.

Waste Incinerators

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to building an incinerator which could deal with non-hazardous and non-toxic waste as well as with hazardous waste.

Mr. Needham: There are significant differences in the requirements for the combustion and destruction of these wastes.

Chemical Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the percentage of chemical waste produced by (1) Du Pont and (2) the rest of Northern Ireland which could be rendered safe by a digestion process.

Mr. Needham: Chemical waste produced by Du Pont and other similar industries in Northern Ireland is, by its nature, not digestible by any known process. The only possible methods of disposal are in hazardous waste landfill or by high temperature incineration.

Harbour Improvements

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken to improve the harbours at Church Bay, Rathlin and at Ballycastle, and to promote a better ferry service.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) has taken the following steps to improve the ferry service between Ballycastle and Rathlin:

(a) Negotiations are under way with the ferry operators regarding the provison of an annual subsidy to ensure the continuance of the serviceand for a grant toward the improvement of the ferries, particularly as regards passenger safety and comfort.

(b) Work is being carried out this year to improve acces s to Rathlin Harbour. Taking into account investigations at Ballycastle Harbour total expenditure this year will be over £300,000.

(c) Plans to provide safe berthing at Ballycastle and to deepen the harbour at, and channel to, Rathlin Harbour have been agreed with the Moyle District Council which owns the harbours. These works have been estimated at almost £4 million and, subject to the availability of finance, are schedule for completion in 1993.

These actions will secure the ferry service in the short term and will allow the introduction of a modern service. The form of such a service has not yet been decided.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give for each available year from 1978, the energy consumption, broken down by fuel, of the buildings occupied by his Department, expressing the figures in (a) cash terms, (b) 1990-91 money terms and (c) units of consumption for electricity in kilowatt hours, gas in therms, liquid fuel in litres and solid fuel in tonnes; and if he will give the square footage of accommodation to which these figures relate.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 3 June 1991]: The energy information requested for the years prior to 1983-84 and the square footage information prior to 1986-87 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. From 1983-84 onwards, the energy consumption and costs for the Northern Ireland Government office estate, broken down by fuel together with the square footage of accommodation to which it relates, is as follows:—

WALES

Rural Affairs Department

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received advocating the setting up of a rural affairs department in the Welsh Office; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: No statistics are kept of representations on this subject, but I am aware of a small number of representations over recent years.

Because of the multi-functional nature of my right hon. Friend's responsibilities, the Welsh Office is well placed to take an overview of different policies as they affect rural affairs. There is also a great deal of collaboration between the various parts of the Welsh Office and between the Department and other agencies and bodies concerned with rural affairs.

Teachers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of teacher vacancies and vacancies as a percentage of teachers in post in Wales (a) by grade and (b) by main teaching subject in each year from 1986;

(2) if he will publish a value showing (a) the number of teacher vacancies and (b) vacancies as a percentage of teachers in post in each county in Wales during each year from 1986;

(3) if he will publish the results of his Department's latest survey into teacher vacancies in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest survey on teacher vacancies was carried out in January 1991. The results are included in the following tables which show the number of teacher vacancies in all schools and the number of vacancies by subject in secondary schools between 1986 and 1991. Comparable information for the primary sector is not available for 1986 and 1987. Details of teacher vacancies by subject in primary schools and by grade are not held centrally.

[1] Prior to 1991 the number of vacancies for teachers taking Welsh was included with those vacancies for teachers taking other languages. LEAs also reported teacher vacancies for teachers required to teach two languages in this category.

[2] Separately identified figures for heads and deputy heads were collected for the first time in 1988 possibly resulting in undercounting in earlier years. But to the extent that they were recorded prior to 1988 they will have been allocated to a teaching subject, slightly inflating the number of vacancies in individual subjects relative to their 1988 value.

Notes:

1. Vacancies are recorded for full-time permanent appointments or full-time appointments of at least one term's duration which an authority intends to fill or to which it has unsuccessfully attempted to make such an appointment.
2. The number of teachers is provided by LEAs on the form 618G and relates to all teachers working full-time. The number of teaching posts has been estimated by applying the proportion of teachers in each subject obtained from the 1989 Secondary School Staffing Survey to the number of full-time teachers in post in each year.

Policy Reviews

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to publish the results, or a report thereof, of his quinquennial review of the work of the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Land Authority for Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The conclusions of the reviews will be published and these will be placed in the Library of the House.

Trading Standards

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his proposals for the future of the organisation of the trading standards service in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The organisation of the trading standards service will be a matter for consideration in the context of any decision to restructure local government in Wales.

Craft Industry

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of how public funding provided in 1990-91 to aid the craft industry in Wales via the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Wales Craft Council was spent; how many businesses benefited directly therefrom; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The financial year 1990-91 was the final year of the three-year Craft Initiative. Details of how public funding provided to aid the craft industry in Wales was spent during the initiative, and the number of businesses that benefited in that period, were provided in the evaluation of the initiative. A copy of this has been placed in the Library of the House.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the changes in the incidence of unemployment in (a) Wales and (b) the area covered by the valleys programme in each of the past 30 months for which figures are available.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is contained in the following table:

Standard Assessment Tasks

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all those who have made representations concerning the implementation of standard assessment tasks; and whether he intends to revise them following their representations.

Sir Wyn Roberts: As at 27 June the following representations had been received.

	Number of Representations
Teachers	10
School governing bodies	15
Parents	[1]8
Teacher associations and unions	3

[1] Plus 1 petition containing 58 signatures.

Many of the correspondents provide constructive comment on the assessment arrangements and these have been forwarded to the School Examinations and Assessment Council, which is currently undertaking a wide-ranging evaluation of this year's exercise.

Employment Action Team

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the employment action scheme will begin in Wales; and in what travel-to-work areas the scheme will be implemented.

Sir Wyn Roberts: "Employment Action" is due to be introduced in the autumn. All training and enterprise councils will shortly be invited to enter into negotiations with the Employment Department about the scale and nature of local provision.

Royal Welch Fusiliers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the future of the Royal Welch Fusiliers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have received 59 written representations calling for the continuation of the Royal Welch Fusiliers in their present form. We have also received a number of personal representations.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was raised by local authorities in Wales in 1990-91 using their discretionary powers to raise £5 per head of adult population, in areas where there is a single tier of principal local authority, and £2·50 per head of adult population, in areas where there are two administrative tiers; and if he has made any assumptions for the likely yield under this power for 1991-92.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not collected centrally.

Local Authority Usable Receipts

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate for local authority usable receipts in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Local authorities estimate that at 1 April 1991 they had £40 million of usable accumulated capital receipts. In addition, they forecast that the usable part of receipts received in 1991-92 will be £34 million. No equivalent figures are available for later periods.

Planning Applications

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many planning applications, rejected by local authorities, that were subsequently approved by Welsh Office inspectors on appeal, there were in each Welsh planning area in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is as follows:

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Welsh Office does not plan to run any television advertising campaigns.

The Department will run three publicity campaigns in 1991-92 costing more than £100,000:

Enterprise Wales
Road Safety
Drug and Alcohol Misuse

ENERGY

Electricity Act

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects codes of practice to be published and complaints procedures to be established as required by the Electricity Act 1989; and what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the Director General of Electricity Supply has discharged his duties with respect to consumer protection arrangements envisaged in that Act.

Mr. Wakeham: I understand from the Office of Electricity Regulation that most of the regional electricity companies' codes of practice and procedures have now been approved by the Director General of Electricity Supply, and that the remainder should reach that stage shortly. I meet the director general regularly to discuss all aspects of the regulation of the electricity industry and am confident that he is discharging his duties effectively. Consumers will benefit directly from the challenging standards of performance on customer service set by the director general which come into force today. These important initiatives are a practical example of improvements in service to customers of the kind which are at the heart of the citizens' charter proposals.

Wave Energy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to remove the responsibility for developing a United Kingdom wave energy programme from the Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: No. Responsibility rests with my Department for the general research development and demonstration programme for renewable energy technologies; this includes wave energy. The energy technology support unit, based at the Harwell laboratory of the Atomic Energy Authority, is responsible for the day-to-day management of the programme and reports directly to my Department on the performance of its work.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the average length of time taken to process a claim by a network installer under the Government's home energy efficiency scheme; and what is the accepted performance target for such work.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A proportion of cases are subject to technical monitoring and payment is only made once work has been found to reach the required standards. My Department's contract with the Energy Action Grants Agency—EAGA—requires it for at least 90 per cent. of all cases to approve valid claims or reject incorrect claims for grant money made by a network installer under the home energy efficiency scheme within 15 working days of receipt. The EAGA is currently meeting this target.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he has taken to ensure that arrangements under the home energy efficiency scheme are satisfactory and that adequate resources are being made available for both network installers and contractors to undertake their work.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Initial experience in operating the scheme has confirmed that it meets a real need and is being well received. The changes to HEES that I recently announced will further promote standards and protect clients. I am satisfied that the funding available is adequate to treat some 200,000 homes in the current financial year.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cash value of the non-fossil fuel obligation in the year to date in terms of the additional payment to Nuclear Electric for the cost of generation and the remainder of the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Details of premium payments made by the regional electricity companies to specific generators contracted within the non-fossil fuel obligation —NFFO—are commercially confidential. However, the Director General of Electricity Supply has announced that in 1990-91 receipts from the fossil fuel levy, available for financing NFFO qualifying arrangements, amounted to £1,175 million.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the total megawatt capacity of bids for entrance in the second tranche of the non-fossil fuel obligation; and how these are split between the categories of renewable energies that he is considering.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I regret that I am unable to give the information requested, because to do so might prejudice the operation of the competitive tendering procedure that has been adopted by the Non-Fossil Purchasing Agency Ltd. for selecting the projects to be contracted under the proposed Renewables Order 1991.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any proposals for disaggregating the nuclear from the non-nuclear segments of the non-fossil fuel obligation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: For practical reasons, and to reflect the Government's policy of introducing additional tranches of renewables capacity during the 1990s, the non-fossil fuel obligations in respect of nuclear and renewables have been made under separate orders. However, my right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce separate levies for nuclear and renewables, which would be cumbersome and inefficient.

Sizewell B

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what advance payments of nuclear levy have been made to Nuclear Electric in respect of the Sizewell B nuclear power station during its construction phase;

(2) what arrangements he has made for the payment of nuclear levy in respect of Sizewell B (a) before it is fuelled, (b) during its phasing-in period and (c) in operation at full capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Details of premium payments made by the Regional Electricity Companies to specific generators contracted within the Non-Fossil Fuel Obligation, including Nuclear Electrict plc, are commercially confidential.

Non-fossil Fuel Levy

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to review the 1998 terminal date for the application of the non-fossil fuel levy, or any subsection of it.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend and I are confident that the regional electricity companies have the flexibilities they need to offer generators acceptable contracts under the proposed Renewables Order 1991. My Department's forthcoming renewables review will provide an opportunity to consider the longer-term implications.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Wakeham: My Department has a continuing programme of publicity to promote energy efficiency, including a joint campaign with the Department of the Environment on the environment and home energy efficiency, the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry and renewable sources of energy. None of these campaigns will involve television advertising in the current year.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Daresbury Laboratory

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the investment in total in current values to set up and establish the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury as an operating centre.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The final capital cost of the nuclear structure facility was £13·6 million at 1980 price levels. This corresponds to £26·3 million at current prices.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to (a) the capital costs, (b) the setting-up costs, (c) the commissioning costs and (d) the back-up costs of the LINAC facility at Daresbury laboratory.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The equipment forming the LINAC facility was transferred from the university of Oxford and installed at Daresbury laboratory at a cost of £1,235,000. Associated work to set up beam lines and new laboratories cost a further £880,000. The contribution by Daresbury laboratory's own staff in installing and setting up the facility cannot be separately disaggregated.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will construct a table showing the capital investments in the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury, the year of those investments and the originally expected usable lifetimes of the major items involved.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The capital cost of the original nuclear structure facility was £13·6 million at 1980 prices. A programme of enhancements has been carried out since then and contained within the annual NSF operating budget which has varied within the range of £5·5 million to £6·6 million. The superconducting linear accelerator (LINAC) was transferred and installed at the NSF in 1990 at a capital cost of £1·2 million.

Although the NSF could be sustained in operation with the necessary maintenance for a further 10 years or so, SERC's 1989 corporate plan envisaged a change of scientific direction in this field from the mid-1990s. The NSF was expected to sustain a high quality programme of nuclear structure research at least until then.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the expected usable lifetime of the LINAC at Daresbury laboratory; and when it was first used.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Following transfer of the equipment from Oxford university to the nuclear structure facility, the LINAC was inaugurated in November 1990.

Although the LINAC facility could be sustained in operation with increasing maintenance costs for 10 years or so, SERC's 1989 corporate plan envisaged a change of scientific direction in the field of nuclear structure physics from the mid to late 1990s. The LINAC facility was expected to sustain a high quality performance at least until then.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how the SERC intends to put into action its plans to maintain the nuclear structure facility at the forefront of low-energy, nuclear physics worldwide as outlined in "The Laboratories in the 1990s".

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to him on 25 June 1991, Official Report, column 444.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the LINAC at Daresbury laboratory was inaugurated; and by whom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The superconducting linear accelerator (LINAC) was inaugurated on 26 November 1990 by SERC's chairman, Sir Mark Richmond.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evaluation of the quality of the work emerging from the use of the LINAC at Daresbury laboratory SERC intends to undertake; and whether such evaluation will be published.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that the SERC has no plans to conduct such a study.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the capital asset value of the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Alan Howarth: As a unique scientific facility with a single use, the nuclear structure facility has no meaningful commercial or market value.

"The Laboratories in the 1990s"

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the report "The Laboratories in the 1990s" by SERC was submitted to him.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department saw the report that went to the SERC council in July 1990 and received the published version in June this year.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to how the SERC intends to put into action its plans for other laboratories to build on its international roles as outlined in "The Laboratories in the 1990s".

Mr. Alan Howarth: Information on the SERC's plans is contained in its coroporate plans and other material made available to the Department.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what date the SERC report "The Laboratories in the 1990s" was generally distributed; and what its costs of publication were.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The cost to SERC of publishing the report was £2,682. It was distributed by it earlier this month.

Scientific Research

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the expenditure in each of the last five years, from his departmental vote on the dual funding system for scientific research; and what is the provision for this in the current year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under the dual support system for funding scientific research, universities receive funds from the Department's vote both through institutional funding from UFC and specific project grants from the research councils.

Funding from the UFC in support of research council projects is not separately identified in the UFC's allocations to universities. The estimated total UFC funding spent on scientific research over the period 1986-87 to 1989-90 was:

	£ million
1986-87	655
1987-88	695

Estimates for 1990-91 and 1991-92 taking account of outturn data on university spending are not yet available. However, the Government's plans provided for a year-on-year increase of some 10 per cent. in the total available public funding for universities through UFC recurrent grant and publicly funded tuition fees in each year. Within their overall allocations, it is for individual institutions to determine their spending on teaching and different types of research.

Actual spending by research councils on grants for research in universities and other bodies was as follows. The figures include grants for research in polytechnics and other higher education institutions, expenditure on interdisciplinary research centres and a small number of grants to other bodies which are outside the dual support system.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to place in the Library each month the number of student loans outstanding and the total value of the amount owed.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I am informed by the Student Loans Company Ltd. that, at 31 May 1991, 136,516 loans were outstanding. The total value of the amount owed was £54,109,897. Figures as at the end of June and each succeeding calendar month will be placed in the Library as soon as they are available.

Training

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students there are in (a) non-vocational and (b) leisure-related classes, who have been given work release by employers to attend those classes for training purposes.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of students in PCFC institutions and further education colleges, excluding adult education centres, in England who were released by employers to attend identified non-vocational and leisure related classes was some 400 in 1989-90.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend launched a teacher recruitment campaign this morning which will include advertising on television.

Other publicity campaigns costing more than £100,000 which are intended to be carried out in the current financial year are:

— a campaign to provide parents with information about changes in the education system; and — the professional, industrial and commercial updating (PICKUP) programme which continues to support and encourage colleges, polytechnics and universities to improve and increase their provision to meet the training needs of employers and their employees.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Sitting Hours

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his answers of 25 March, Official Report, column 607-8, what proposals he had for reviewing the hours of sitting of the House.

Mr. McGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the announcement I made to the House on Thursday 27 June at col. 1161.

HEALTH

Mental Illness

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of beds available to the national health service for the treatment of mental illness in 1980 and in 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1989-90, the latest year for which information is available centrally, there were 59,290 average daily available mental illness beds in national health service hospitals in England, compared with 87,396 in 1980.

The numbers of mentally ill patients staying in hospital for long periods has been falling since the mid-1970s. This is true not only for England but for most other developed countries. Over the last 30 years it has become clear from research that less reliance need be placed on in-patient care and better results can be achieved using more day-patient and community care. Additionally the advent of the major tranquillisers in the mid-1950s enabled many patients who previously needed long-term in-patient care to benefit from care on an out-patient basis.

This has been reflected in the steady improvement in community-based services for mentally ill people in the past 10 years. Gross spending on hospital and community health services for mentally ill people increased by 27 per cent. in real terms between 1979-80 and 1989-90 to £1,661·7 million. Gross spending on local authority social services for the mentally ill has increased substantially and will be further increased by the mental illness specific grant which came into effect on 1 April 1991. The number of community psychiatric nurses has more than trebled from 1,083 in 1981 to 3,380 in 1989.

The number of mental illness day hospital places in England increased from 15,300 in 1981 to over 19,000 in 1988. Total provision of day centre places for mentally ill people, including places in mixed centres and those made available to local authorities by voluntary bodies, rose from 7,600 in 1981 to 10,400 places in 1988.

Pharmaceutical Industry

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the British position where the European Commission's proposal for a Council regulation aimed at improving the protection of innovation in the pharmaceutical industry is concerned.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs gave my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory) on 15 April at columns 32-33. We will continue to take part constructively in the discussions with other member states to reach an acceptable outcome.

Health Authority Spending

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the spending per head of population served by Warrington district health authority in the latest available year; and what is the figure on the most nearly comparable basis for (a) England and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Dorrell: Figures for spending per head of resident population for 1989-90, the latest year available, are shown in the table:

Revenue expenditure per head of resident population—hospital and community health services (HCHS)[1]

Warrington District Health Authority	305
England—average for all district health authorities	271
United Kingdom	285

[1] Includes hospital, community health, patient transport (i.e. ambulance) blood transfusion and other services.

Sources

(a) 1989-90 annual accounts of district health authorities in England and those of the analogous health authorities and boards in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland—as submitted to the central health departments in each country.

(b) Mid-year estimates of populations—1989 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes to the Table

1. Expenditure by regional health authorities, special health authorities and all capital expenditure on HCHS is excluded. Expenditure on family health services (which cannot be strictly attributed to particular districts) and expenditure on personal social services (which in Northern Ireland is accounted for by Health and Social Services Boards) is also excluded.

2. Comparisons between the figures are influenced by a number of factors including:

(a) people travel across district boundaries for treatment and resource allocations reflect the pattern of service provision locally;

(b) the population figures used make no allowance for people resident in particular districts who receive treatment in others or for differences in morbidity and the age/sex structure of particular populations.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) in-patient and (b) out-patient waiting lists were in (i) England, (ii) the Mersey regional health authority and (iii) Warrington district health authority in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested on in-patients is given in the table. Out-patient waiting list information is not collected centrally. It is the time individual patients wait that matters, not the total numbers on the list. Numbers waiting more than one year for in-patient treatment have fallen by 7 per cent. in England since 1979. In Mersey they have fallen by 73 per cent. and in Warrington by 97 per cent. in the same period.

Numbers treated have increased since 1979. In 1989-90 in the order of 38 per cent. more in-patients were treated than in 1979 in England as a whole, 40 per cent. more were treated in Mersey region and 65 per cent. more in Warrington health authority.

Numbers on in-patient waiting list 1979 and 1989-90

	England	Mersey RHA	Warrington DHA

September 1990[1]	705,706	29,609	1,756

Medical Consultations

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients paid for initial consultations for medical problems for each year from 1985 to date, both as a number and a percentage; and how many received further treatment from the NHS.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

Student Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority for the last 12 months, the number of national health service student nurses (a) who have graduated as registered general nurses and (b) the number still unemployed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the number of student nurses graduating from training in the last 12 months and not yet employed in the NHS is not collected centrally.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress of the HIV/AIDS team inquiry at Leeds general infirmary.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are not aware of such an inquiry taking place.

Grants

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the voluntary organisations that have received grants, and the level of grant received, up to the present date under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 within the current financial period 1991-92.

Mr. Dorrell: To date, approval has been given for the payment in 1991-92 under the section 64 general scheme of grants totalling £12,337,844. Details are shown in the table.

Residential Care Homes

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of beds provided in residential care for elderly people in (a) local authority residential care homes, (b) private residential care homes and (c) independent nursing homes, by district health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of nursing home beds by each district health authority is contained in "Private Hospitals Homes and Clinics Registered under Section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984". The number of residential care places for elderly and younger physically handicapped people by local authority is contained in "RA/89/2 Residential Accommodation for Elderly and for Young Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes Year ending 31 March 1989 England". Copies of both these publications are in the Library.

Mental Handicap

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department makes each year of the likely changes in numbers by region of children needing health services who are born mentally handicapped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Responsibility for assessing the likely health service needs of the local population including children with learning disabilities (mental handicap) rests with individual district health authorities. The Department is, however, currently funding a research project led by Professor Alberman of the London hospital medical school to predict the incidence and prevalence of severe learning disability. It is hoped that this will lead to guidance which will assist authorities in the planning of local health, social and educational services over the next 30 years.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what weight is given in determining levels of funding to health authorities to the numbers of people moving into and out of an area in each year who are mentally handicapped adults and children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Regional health authority allocations are calculated by means of a weighted capitation formula which takes as its starting point the region's projected resident population for the year of allocation. The latest available figures, provided by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, are used in the formula. The projections data are based on the 1981 census and represent OPCS's estimate of population changes since then, together with assumptions for future mortality, fertility and migration. No specific allowance is made for the number of mentally handicapped people moving into and out of an area in each year.

Abortion

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many legal abortions have taken place in each of the 17 health districts in Yorkshire in each year from 1980 onwards; and on what grounds these abortions were granted.

Mr. Dorrell: Full information is available only at disproportionate cost. Readily available data for residents of the districts are given in the tables.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Dorrell: Proposed publicity campaigns for 1991-92 costing more than £100,000 are as follows:

Help with NHS Treatment Costs.
Health Advice for Travellers.
Organ Donation.
Blood Donor Recruitment.
Keep Warm Keep Well.
Information for Disabled People, advisors and carers.
Children's Act.
Community Care.
AIDS.
Drug misuse.
Women's Health.
Nursing.
NHS Careers.
'The Health of the Nation' Green Paper.

Other campaigns may be included during the year.

Decisions have yet to be taken on the use of television advertising.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had been waiting for more than a year for an operation in East Birmingham district on (a) 31 December 1989, and (b) 31 March 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to the reply, 20 June, column 302]: I regret that there was an error in my previous reply. The number of people waiting for over a year for in-patient operations in East Birmingham district at 30 September 1990 should read 247.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Review

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the distribution of his consultation document on the future of local government.

Mr. Key: Copies of the consultation paper "The Structure of Local Government in England" were sent to all principal local authorities, local authority associations, Members of Parliament and major national organisations with an interest in local government and to other organisations and individuals on request.

Waste Management

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to provide up-to-date waste management guidance on the implementation of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is actively engaged in revising and developing its waste management papers series. This was stated in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance".

Publication of these papers started in 1976 to provide authoritative technical guidance and codes of practice on waste handling and disposal methods. They are recognised by waste management practitioners and regulators as standards of good practice and are respected throughout the industry. We intend to build on this foundation to provide comprehensive backing for the high and consistent standards of waste management to be introduced under the Environmental Protection Act. Following public consultation, we have today published a new waste management paper (No.28) on the recycling of waste.

Our proposed programme for further work on waste management papers is as follows:

WMP	Subject	Consultation	Issue of final document
28	Recycling	out	July 1991
27	Landfill gas	July 1991	October 1991

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what weight is given in determining grant levels to local authorities each year to the numbers of people moving into a council area for (a) all people, (b) school age children, (c) mentally handicapped adults and (d) mentally handicapped children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The amount of revenue support grant received by each authority depends on its standard spending assessment—the Government's view of the appropriate amount of revenue expenditure for each local authority. The SSAs are based on a number of indicators including resident population, population aged under 18 years and school pupils and students. Full details are given in the "Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England)" which is in the Library. No separate account is taken of the numbers of people who move between authorities each year, but the information used is the most up to date available on a consistent basis for all authorities.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what formula he accounts for revenue funding in each year for local authorities who have rising numbers of children and adults suffering mental handicap; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Revenue funding in respect of social services provided by local authorities for children and adults suffering mental handicap is based on the children's social services and the other social services standard spending assessments. Details of these formulae are given in he "Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England)" which is in the Library.

3Ds Ltd.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 394, on 3Ds Ltd., if he will list the shareholders referred to; and what examination he proposes to make of the suitability of 3Ds Ltd. as a recipient of a city grant.

Mr. Key: The shareholders of 3Ds Ltd. are Brian Peace, Paul Malkin and Old Court Ltd. If a full appraisal of the proposed development is undertaken, the Department will need to satisfy itself that 3Ds Ltd. has the experience, expertise and capacity to carry out and complete the project.

Industrial Discharges

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the average levels of polychlorinated biphenyl in industrial discharges in the Rossendale and Darwen constituency; what is the highest level of measured discharge of polychlorinated biphenyl; and what is the maximum permitted discharge level.

Mr. Trippier: There are no consented discharges to water of polychlorinated biphenyls in the Rossendale and Darwen constituency.

Civil and Marine Ltd.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment has been made of the environmental impact of the proposed gravel extraction from the Thames estuary by Civil and Marine Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The decision to grant a licence for the extraction of marine sand and gravel rests with the Crown estate after consultation with those whose interests may be affected by the proposed dredging. My Department is responsible for co-ordinating these consultations and formulating the Government view. I understand that the Crown estate is at present considering the proposal made by Civil and Marine Ltd. and will take full account of all the environmental issues before any request for a Government view may be made.

Urban Programme

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table showing, separately for each year of the last five financial years, the allocation of resources to each urban programme authority and the level of spending achieved by each authority.

Mr. Key [holding answer 27 June 1991]: The total amounts of (a) urban programme expenditure allocated to local authorities in England and (b) expenditure outturn achieved by those authorities, for each year from 1986-87 to 1990-91, were as follows:

	(a) Total allocation £ million	(b) Total outturn £ million
1986-87	228·84	220·42
1987-88	260·10	234·59
1988-89	245·69	226·58
1989-90	237·40	229·57
[1]1990-91	245·52	227·79

[1] The figures for 1990-91 are necessarily provisional at this stage.

These figures do not include top slices for special initiatives or district health authority allocations and outturns.

I enclose tables showing details for all the authorities. Copies of these tables will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Pentachlorophenol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he possesses concerning the current rates of discharge of the pesticide pentachlorophenol to the environment; and what are the primary sources of these discharges.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 27 June 1991]: Results of monitoring for pentachlorophenol are compiled by the National Rivers Authority and returned annually by my Department to the European Commission. These results are also held on the National Rivers Authority's public registers. Discharges containing pentachlorophenol occur mainly in the north-west and Yorkshire National Rivers Authority regions where pentachlorophenol has been applied as a rot-proofing agent in cloth used by textile finishing companies.

Aggregates

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to publicise (i) the availability of the document "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales: Review of MPG6" and (ii) the fact that his Department will take into account the views of interested parties on this document when revising mineral plan guidance note 6.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 17 June 1991]: Following the reply which I gave on 7 May, Official Report, column 401, about this report my Department issued a press release to announce its publication. This has received extensive media coverage. The report has also been made available to a number of interested organisations and individuals. We have made it clear in both the press release and report that we welcome the views of all interested parties on the forecasts. These will be taken into account in the preparation of the revised draft guidelines.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show for each local authority (a) the gain or loss in area protection grant in million pounds and pounds per adult comparing 1990-91 with 1991-92 and (b) political control, for the current financial year.

Mr. Portillo: Area protection grant was not paid before 1991-92. However, it subsumes the safety net and the low rateable value areas grant which operated in 1990-91 and is payable to some of those areas which received help from both those sources, or through the safety net alone, in that year. The amount of area protection grant paid to any area is equal to the amount which it received in 1990-91 from these two sources less £25 per charge payer. Details are as follows:

1991-92 area protection grant and 1990-91 equivalent by authority with political control

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the percentage change in income during the period 1979 to 1987 (a) before and (b) after housing costs, of each percentage group from the households below average incomes data, published in July 1990.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is in the table:

Real Percentage Rise in Each Decile's Median Income 1979-1987

Decile	Before Housing Costs	After Housing Costs
2	6·8	2·4
3	8·6	2·8
4	10·6	7·9
5	13·1	11·9
6	16·0	15·4
7	16·7	17·5
8	19·3	21·4
10	38·8	40·3

The income measures used are the same in all respects to those published in Tables A and D of Annex 1 to HBAI 1981-1987.

War Pensions

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many cases were helped by local war pensions committees over the last five years; and at what cost;

(2) whether he has any plans to increase resources available to local war pensions committees.

Miss Widdecombe: The numbers of cases relating to war pensions and allowances which were heard by local war pensions committees over the last five years is as follows:

1987 — 240
1988 — 356
1989 — 251
1990 — 247

In addition, members of the committees and their associated voluntary workers undertook a number of welfare visits to war pensioners in their own homes.

Information on the cost of war pensions committees is not available. Expenditure on the committees is met from the overall budget for the war pensioners welfare service and is not recorded separately. We have no current plans to increase the resources available to war pensions committees.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the current budget available to the section of his Department which administers the war pensioners' welfare service; and what increases are planned for the next two years;

(2) whether he has any plans to extend the scope and expand the services provided by the war pensioners' welfare service.

Miss Widdecombe: The budget available for the administration of the war pensioners' welfare service for 1991-92 is £3·7 million. Budgets for the following two years have not yet been decided.

The war pensioners' welfare service is available to all war disablement pensioners and war widows, and its services are kept under regular review. The war pensions directorate, which is responsible for delivering those services, is currently in the process of consulting ex-service organisations about them. We shall review the services provided by the welfare service in the light of those consultations.

Adjudication Regulations

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review or amend regulation 72 of the Social Security Benefit (Adjudication) Regulations 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: We recently referred a proposed draft amendment to regulation 72 to the Social Security Advisory Committee. The committee has reported its findings, which we are currently considering.

Asbestos

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the lowest level of war disablement pension paid to those suffering from asbestosis;

(2) how many war disablement pensions have been and are being paid because of asbestosis arising from exposure to asbestos dust while in the forces; and how many of the asbestosis pensioners have died.

Miss Widdecombe: War disablement pensions are awarded where the degree of disablement due to service in the armed forces ranges from 20 to 100 per cent.; if less than 20 per cent. a gratuity may be awarded. These provisions apply to all disabilities.

Information regarding war pensions awarded as a result of exposure to asbestos is not available.

Benefits

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what forecast of the percentage take-up of widows' benefits has been used when estimating expenditure on these benefits for 1991-92.

Miss Widdecombe: The planned level of expenditure on widows' benefits shown in table 1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1991-92 to 1993-94, Social Security" (Cm. 1514), was based on the figures available in the autumn of 1990 on the number of recipients, the composition of their families and the level of awards, and on the trends in those figures and the effects of uprating. It was not based on any explicit view of future take-up, but, implicitly, on the established trend.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what forecast of the percentage take-up of disability working allowance has been used when estimating expenditure on this benefit in 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: Disability working allowance will not be introduced until April 1992.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what forecast of the percentage take-up of invalid care allowance has been used when estimating expenditure on this benefit in 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: The planned level of expenditure on invalid care allowance shown in table 1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1991-92 to 1993-94, Social Security" (Cm. 1514), was based on the figures available in the autumn of 1990 on the number of recipients, the circumstances in which they are caring, the level of awards and changes in other benefits which affect entitlement, and on the trends in those figures and the effects of uprating. It was not based on any explicit view of future take-up, but, implicitly, on the established trend.

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what forecast of the percentage take-up of family income supplement has been used when estimating expenditure on this benefit in 1991-92.

Mr. Jack: Family income supplement was replaced by family credit in April 1988. The planned level of expenditure on family credit shown in table 1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1991-92 to 1993-94, Social Security" (Cm. 1514), was based on the figures available in the autumn of 1990 on the number of recipients, the composition of their families and the level of awards, and on the trends in those figures and the effects of uprating. It was not based on any explicit view of future take-up, but, implicitly, on the established trend.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he intends to take following the ruling of the European Court of Justice on Roger Newton's entitlement to mobility allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Newton's case will be referred back to the social security commissioner for determination in the light of the European Court's judgment. We are considering what other steps need to be taken to give effect to the court's judgment.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the number of people living in other European Community countries who will be entitled to reinstatement of mobility allowance following the decision of the European Court of Justice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are considering the full implications of this judgment. We estimate that fewer than 100 people each year lose their mobility allowance when they move to live in another EC member state.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the ruling of the European Court of Justice in the case of Roger Newton applies to benefits other than mobility allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We are studying the full text of the judgment to consider its wider implications for non-contributory disability benefits.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department currently has no firm plans for television advertising. A publicity campaign connected with the Disability Living Allowance and Disability Working Allowance Act is likely to involve expenditure in excess of £100,000 but firm media plans have not yet been concluded. We have not given approval for any other publicity campaigns with this level of expenditure.

Disabled People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received concerning the Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986 since March 1991; and how many have objected to the non-implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 and the delaying of section 7.

Mr. Dorrell: I have been asked to reply.

Between 1 March 1991 and 26 June 1991 we received 212 letters concerning our decision not to implement sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons Act, two of which also referred to section 7. One letter was also received on the matter of section 7 only. The Act was also the subject of seven parliamentary questions during this period.

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of increasing the personal allowance for young people under the age of 25 years who are in receipt of (a) community charge benefit and (b) housing benefit to £39·65 for 1991-92.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 27 June 1991]: The latest estimates suggest that these measures would cost (a) £25 million, and (b) £25 million in Great Britain in 1991-92.

Source: Modelled using data drawn from the 1986-87-88 Family Expenditure Surveys.

SCOTLAND

Pensions

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the date of the announcement that public service pensioners had been underpaid due to an error in calculating the retail prices index; what was the amount of money due to national health service pensioners on that date in Scotland; what was the amount of money paid by his Department into the national health service pensioners trust and the date on which it was paid; and by how much that amount was adjusted for inflation.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his questions given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health on 28 June.

William Wallace Heritage Centre

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what requests he has received for funding of a William Wallace heritage centre at Elderslie; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am not aware of having received any request for funding for a William Wallace heritage centre at Elderslie. I would be willing to consider such a request.

Judicial Appointments

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the creation of a judicial appointments committee in relation to the selection and appointment of judges and sheriffs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None. The present arrangements are kept under review to ensure that in respect of each vacancy the best-fitted candidate is appointed.

Police (Civil Damages)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the total amount of money paid out by police authorities for civil damages since 1980.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not collected centrally and cannot quickly be obtained.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training trainees (a) acquired full-time employment, (b) gained vocational qualifications, (c) failed to complete the training plan and (d) entered self-employment, expressed as a percentage since ET's inception.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is given in the table. Information is not available for the periods prior to July 1989 and is not yet available beyond December 1990. Many of those not completing their agreed training leave to enter jobs, self-employment or full-time education.

Employment Training
Trainee outcomes: July1989—December 1990

	Percentage of all leavers
In full-time employment 3 months after leaving	24
In self-employment 3 months after leaving	5
Obtained a qualification or credit towards one	24
Did not complete training agreed with training provider	54

Source: ET national follow-up survey.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the report of his Department's survey of trainees on employment training was completed; and when it was made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Jackson: The survey of trainees on Employment Training is not yet complete.

TUC (Training)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the level of departmental funding of the Trades Union Congress for educational purposes; what criteria determines the continuity of that funding; which section of his Department is responsible for vetting materials used on TUC training or education courses which use departmental funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has offered the TUC a trade union education and training grant of £1·734 million for 1991-92. The continuity of such funding is dependent on a satisfactory annual review of expenditure of the grant and on the overriding need to control public expenditure. Monitoring the expenditure of the grant to ensure that it satisfies the terms and conditions of the relevant memorandum of arrangements is carried out jointly by officials of the Department of Employment and the TUC with the assistance of Her Majesty's inspectorate.

Skill Centres

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps have been taken to monitor the use by the TICC (Lakin Consortium) of the £2·1 million transfer fee paid to it as part of the sale of four skill centres; and how much has been spent on the acquisition of non-training companies.

Mr. Jackson: Under the terms of the sale of the skills training agency there is no continued business relationship between my Department and any of the purchasers. TICC Ltd. is a private company and my Department has no responsibility for its business activities.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list any changes in (a) the numbers of staff, (b) the volume of training and (c) staff terms and conditions resulting from the transfer of four skill centres to TICC (Lakin Consortium).

Mr. Jackson: The four skill centres purchased by TICC Ltd. are now in the private sector and issues relating to staff numbers, volumes of training and changes of staff terms and conditions are matters for the company and its staff.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what monitoring he is undertaking of any proposals by TICC (Lakin Consortium) relating to (a) closure of any of the four skill centres, (b) the purchase of non-training companies, (c) reductions in staffing levels and (d) the honouring of contracts agreed with the civil service before the transfer of the four centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: TICC Ltd. is a private company and the four skill centres purchased by TICC Ltd. are now in the private sector. Any issues relating to the future business plans of TICC Ltd. or its staff numbers, are matters for the company and its staff.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list any conditions attached to the payment of £2·1 million to TICC Ltd. as part of the transfer of Ipswich, Cumbria, East Lancashire and St. Helens skill centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The payment of £2·1 million to TICC Ltd. was the negative consideration agreed after negotiation between my Department and the company and reflects the overall value that could be attached to the business at the time. No conditions were attached by either party to the sale.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether TICC (Lakin Consortium) was included in the submissions excluded from being allowed to tender for the skill centres; and on what grounds such decisions were made.

Mr. Jackson: At no point in the sale process were TICC Ltd. excluded from the tendering process. Bids were excluded only if they failed to meet the Government's six sale objectives, and TICC Ltd. met these at all stages of the sale.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps were taken to assess (a) the competence of the TICC (Lakin Consortium) to manage the four skill centres transferred to it and (b) the previous record of TICC in providing training.

Mr. Jackson: The Lakin Consortium (now TICC Ltd.) was formed with the intention of placing a bid for part of the skills training agency network. Thorough checks were undertaken by my Department's sale advisers into the background of the consortium members, the financial viability of the new company and its future plans for the training business. These were satisfactory and the bid placed by TICC Ltd. fully met the Government's six sale objectives.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the financial and training record changes which occurred between the initial submissions from TICC (Lakin Consortium) being rejected and his subsequently agreeing to the transfer of four skill centres to this consortium.

Mr. Jackson: TICC's original bid included a number of skill centres for which other bids were put forward. In the context of all the bids put forward, these provided a better match with the Government's sale objectives, so TICC's bid was rejected. The company subsequently submitted a bid for four of the skill centres which remained unsold at the end of the original sale period.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the staff terms and conditions agreed by the Government at the time of transfer of four skill centres to the TICC; and what steps he is taking to ensure compliance by TICC with the contract terms agreed.

Mr. Jackson: The general terms and conditions of former civil servants who transferred to the private sector were protected by the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 so that on privatisation previous conditions still applied. Special arrangements were made to secure the transfer of pension rights which are outside the scope of the regulations. The terms and conditions of TICC's employees are now a matter between them and the company.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list any conditions attached to the payment of £800,000 to Training Businesses Ltd. as part of the transfer of Lambeth's skill centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The payment of £800,000 to the Training Business Ltd. was the negative consideration agreed after negotiations between my Department and the company and reflects the overall value that could be attached to the business at the time. No conditions were attached by either party to the sale.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assurances were given to the skill centres about future levels of employment training funding prior to their transfer being concluded.

Mr. Jackson: No guarantees of Employment Training income have been given to any purchaser of skill centres for the current or subsequent years.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was (a) the number of staff dealing with unemployment benefit claims in each of the standard regions, (b) the number of unemployed people claiming benefit in each of the standard regions and (c) the staff-to-claimant ratio in each of the standard regions, as at 1 March 1990 and 1 May 1991.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Detached Duty Workers

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of detached duty workers recruited and the numbers now operating in the south-east, south-west, London, East Anglia and east midlands dealing with unemployed people claiming benefit; what were the standard regions from which the detached workers were recruited; and what are (a) the total and (b) the additional costs of employing them including travel, overnight allowances, salaries and any other premium payments, for each month between 7 December 1990 to 31 May 1991.

Mr. Jackson: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Electricity Contracting Industry

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the official letter to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), dated 10 June, sent by the director of the Electrical Contractors Association, detailing the response by training enterprise councils to future apprentice training in the electrical contracting industry; and what action he intends to take regarding the problems described in that letter.

Mr. Jackson: All 82 training enterprise councils in England and Wales have offered a youth training (YT) contract to Job Training Ltd. (JTL) which is the managing agency set up by the Electrical Contractors Association (ECA) in conjunction with the Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union. JTL has signed, or is in the process of signing contracts with 80 of the TECs. The company has decided not to contract for places in the Dorset and Somerset TEC areas.

I replied on 28 June to the letter dated 10 June from the director of the Electrical Contractors Association. All problems described in that letter have been addressed.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Jackson: Publicity campaigns costing more than £100,000 planned at this stage by the Department during the remainder of this financial year are press advertising for career development loans in the summer, and in support of the national training awards winners announcement in November.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dioxins

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the research funded or commissioned by his Department in the past 10 years regarding dioxins in foodstuffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A list of the research in question is given in the table. The aim of this work has been to develop reliable analytical methods for the measurement of low levels of dioxins in food. The best of the procedures that have been identified so far have recently been used to survey the levels of dioxins entering the food chain in urban and rural food production areas. Some preliminary results from this work were described in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 26 June, Official Report, col. 500.

Duration	Title	Location
1 January 1986 to 31 May 1988	Development of analytical methods for the analysis of dioxins in biological materials	University of East Anglia
1 October 1987 to 30 September 1988	Production of affinity columns for dioxin analysis	University of East Anglia
1 January 1988 to 30 June 1989	Production and characterisation of antibodies against dioxins use in their analysis	AFRC Institute of Food Research Norwich
1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991	Evaluation of affinity columns for dioxin analysis	MAFF Food Science Laboratory
1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991	Participation in WHO inter-laboratory study on methods for dioxin analysis in human milk and blood	MAFF Food Science Laboratory
1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991	Development of methods of dioxin analysis in support of EC BCR certification of reference materials	MAFF Food Science Laboratory

1 March 1991 to 1 September 1991	Development of immunoaffinity columns for dioxin analysis	Biocode Ltd.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his Department's policy in respect of testing milk for dioxins.

Mr. Maclean: Milk is a good medium for checking on the presence of airborne contaminants in the food chain and is, therefore, being used to build up a picture of dioxin levels in various rural and urban food production areas. Some preliminary results from this work were described in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire West, (Mr. Hind) on 26 June, Official Report, column 500.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the farms which supplied milk within 0·1 picogramme of his Department's safety level for dioxins.

Mr. Maclean: Some preliminary results from a study of dioxin levels in milk from urban and rural areas were described in the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire West, (Mr. Hind) on 26 June, Official Report, column 500. It is not the normal practice, however, to name businesses from which samples have been taken for surveillance purposes.

Blue-ear Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the man hours spent in (a) the field and (b) the laboratory each month since 1 March on blue-ear disease in pigs at the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The man hours spent in (a) the field and (b) the laboratory on blue-eared pig disease by staff at the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre since 1 March are:

Month	(a) In the field	(b) In the laboratory
March	0	5
April	0	10
May	207	132
June[1]	219	144

Sheep Dips

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received (a) from the National Farmers Union, (b) from hon. Members and (c) from individual farmers on the health and environmental consequences of the use of organo-phosphorus sheep dips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members, individual farmers and others on the health and environmental consequences of the use of organo-phosphorous sheep dips. I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 20 June (Official Report, column 449).

Pigs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 24 June, Official Report, column 383, whether he intends to impose restrictions on the holdings in the counties listed that had received pigs from infected holdings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Restrictions have already been placed on holdings which have received pigs from premises with suspected or confirmed cases of blue-eared pig disease within a 56-day period prior to the day that suspicion of disease was reported.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of restrictions imposed on premises with suspected or confirmed cases of blue-ear disease in the past 72 hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Two suspect cases were reported and three cases confirmed within the 72 hours prior to midday on 28 June 1991. The suspect cases involve premises already under restriction, having received pigs from infected premises. One of the suspect cases is in the parish of Paull (Humberside), within the restricted zone; the other is in the parish of Saxilby with Ingleby (Lincolnshire) and is very close to the Humberside restricted zone which has now been extended to include this case. The confirmed cases are in the parishes of Beeford (Humberside), Burneston (Humberside) and Shelton (Norfolk). There are at present a total of 14 confirmed and 10 suspected cases.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Ministry has yet received planning permission for the new veterinary investigation centres at Bury St. Edmunds and Warwickshire; at what stage his plans are for constructing the new centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Outline planning permission was granted by St. Edmundsbury borough council for a new veterinary investigation centre at Bury St. Edmunds on 18 February 1991. The plans for constructing the new centre are now at sketch plan stage. The building is on programme to be completed in mid-1993. For the new centre at Warwickshire a site has been identified on Ministry of Agriculture-owned land at Luddington and an outline planning application was submitted to Stratford-upon-Avon district council at the beginning of June, under the Department of the Environment circular 18/14. The plans for constructing this centre are also at sketch plan stage and the design is on programme for completion of the building in mid-1993.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the percentage of the total United Kingdom statutory salmonella work carried out at the veterinary investigation centre in Lincoln for each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible to provide the information requested for the years prior to 1990. In the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991, 3·6 per cent. of the total statutory salmonella work in Great Britain was carried out in the Lincoln veterinary investigation centre.

Milk, Derbyshire

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will conduct a full investigation into the source of the dioxin contamination which is affecting milk in farms in Derbyshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am setting in hand a programme of further work in this area which is designed to throw light on the ways in which dioxins have come to be found in milk. This will include examinations of soil and grass. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will also be carrying out investigations. The results of the surveillance work will be published.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will name the farms in Derbyshire which have contamination of dioxin in milk above recommended levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Having received their agreement, I have passed the names and addresses of the two farmers concerned to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) but, as I have explained to him, they have indicated that they do not wish their names to be generally publicised.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Curry: MAFF has no plans to carry out television advertising campaigns. A touring exhibition is currently taking consumer information on a wide range of food safety and environmental issues to major shopping centres and agricultural shows; and plans are in hand to revise the Department's range of publications on food.

Thames Gravel

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made of the impact of the proposed extraction of gravel from the Thames estuary on (a) juvenile fish stocks, (b) cockles and (c) whiteweed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The proposal envisages the removal of a layer of silt material in order to extract aggregate from beneath it. In the Ministry's view this extraction process could create a plume of silt in the water column, which would be damaging to important commercial fisheries in the area.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the fishing industry on the proposed extraction of gravel from the Thames estuary by Civil and Marine Ltd.

Mr. Curry: I have received a number of representations objecting to the extraction of gravel from this area. I understand that in the light of consultations the company is not pursuing its application for a licence for experimental dredging.

DEFENCE

Army Act

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what powers he has under the Army Act to reconvene a board of inquiry with revised terms of reference.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Secretary of State for Defence has no direct powers under the Army Act 1955 to convene any board of inquiry. If it is necessary for a particular matter to be investigated by a board of inquiry, it will be convened by the relevant military authorities under the rules laid down in section 135 of the Army Act.

Training Exercises (Injuries)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for the last five years the number and type of injuries received by on-duty service personnel taking part in training exercises.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following table lists, by category, the total numbers by type of injuries received by all service personnel, including Gurkhas, on duty training exercises which required confinement to bed for a period of 48 hours or more, for each of the last five years.

Tri-service episodes of bedded sickness of 48 hours or more due to training injuries (including deaths)

	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990
Aircraft accidents	38	35	31	40	38

TOTAL	1,107	1,044	1,071	876	708

Note: Records of minor injuries which may have required medical attention are not held centrally and are only recorded in the individual personal medical files.

Asbestos

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) in each of the last 10 years what has been the cost of removing asbestos;

(2) in how many Ministry of Defence establishments asbestos has been removed; and in how many establishments it is awaiting removal;

(3) how many claims for compensation there have been against the Ministry because of exposure to asbestos dust since 1961; how many (a) have been rejected, (b) are being negotiated and (c) have been successful; and, for those successful what compensation was paid.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Thurleigh Airfield

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans he has for the Ministry of Defence and the Defence Research Agency to use the airfield at Thurleigh for non-flying purposes;

(2) what will be the role of the Ministry of Defence towards development on the Thurleigh airfield during the transfer of facilities to Boscombe Down and Farnborough up to about 1993;

(3) how he proposes to reconcile a maximum return to Her Majesty's Government on the disposal of land and assets at Thurleigh with the need to safeguard existing residents against loss of amenity and environmental despoliation;

(4) what instructions he has given his consultants covering the next phase of consultations with local authorities and other interested parties over the use of the airfield at Thurleigh;

(5) whether he proposes to agree planning use of the airfield at Thurleigh with Bedfordshire county council prior to the conclusion of any sale to prospective purchasers of the land;

(6) if he will ensure that before any sale of the airfield at Thurleigh he will insist on an evironmental assessment being undertaken to cover the future use of the site;

(7) whether he is prepared to compensate local residents against loss of amenity due to excessive noise in the event of a substantial increase in aircraft use of the airfield at Thurleigh;

(8) if he will consider the disposal of the airfield at Thurleigh within a broad regional and national framework.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following my announcement on 9 May concerning the collocation of research and experimental flying at Boscombe Down, detailed work has been set in hand to assess the options for disposal of the surplus airfields at Bedford and Farnborough.

A specialist consultancy firm has been retained to assist in this phase and it will be continuing its discussions with local planning authorities and other interested parties with a view to submitting recommendations on the planning and marketing strategies to be adopted for the effective disposal of the airfield sites.

As stated in my earlier announcement, our preliminary assessment is that Thurleigh airfield, Bedford could have potential as a commercial non-passenger airfield. It would be our intention to avoid a fragmented disposal of the site, if this were possible, and to offer it for sale in its entirety —save for a small MOD enclave which we envisage will be retained to house a simulator facility. Any proposals for other uses by either the MOD or the Defence Research Agency will need to be considered against the need to make the most cost-effective use of the defence estate, while at the same time maximising the return to the defence budget from the sale of surplus land.

In disposing of Thurleigh, it is our intention to agree a development brief with the local authorities concerned, prior to effecting the disposal of the site. This use of the planning machinery will ensure that any relevant regional and national factors are taken into account in so far as they relate to the disposal of the airfield. In addition, this will allow the maximum return to the MOD consistent with legitimate local requirements. We are considering the preparations of an environmental impact assessment once our future disposal plans are clearer. The environmental impact arising from further development of the airfield, after disposal by the MOD, and any question of compensation that may arise would, of course, be for a new owner of the airfield to resolve.

The MOD will consider all proposals for development of Thurleigh airfield in the period leading up to disposal on their merits, subject to their not prejudicing the longer-term disposal strategy.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 20 June, Official Report, columns 314-15, whether any members of the armed services are serving in Iraq.

Mr. Archie Hamilton : I can confirm that the answer I gave on 20 June at columns 314-15 did not include the members of the armed forces deployed to northern Iraq as a temporary measure to provide humanitarian assistance to Kurdish refugees. Members of the Royal Marines continue to operate in the areas providing reassurance and security to the Kurds.

Service Men Overseas

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) Official Report, 20 June, columns 314-15, if he will set out (a) the number of members of the armed services who are currently serving in each of the countries listed in the 1991 columns and (b) the reasons for their deployment in each country listed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The latest detailed information available for deployment of United Kingdom manpower overseas, was at 30 June 1990, without incurring disproportionate cost, is as follows:

	Number
Federal Republic of Germany (stationed forces)	61,109
Elsewhere in continental Europe (stationed forces)	7,281
Gibraltar (garrison)	1,835
Cyprus (garrison and UNFICYP)	4,776
Elsewhere in Mediterranean, Near East and Gulf	[2]1,267
Hong Kong (garrison)	2,118
Elsewhere in Far East	453
Other locations (including Falklands and Belize garrisons)	8,357

Notes:

1. The figures include personnel on loan to countries in the areas shown and personnel at sea in each area. Defence attaches and advisers and their staffs are included under "other locations". The figure for the Federal Republic of Germany includes personnel serving in Northern Ireland on emergency tours of duty but remaining under the command of the Commander-in-Chief BAOR. The figures exclude non-United Kingdom manpower, including Gurkhas and locally engaged personnel.

2. Around 1,200 personnel are currently serving in Iraq and some 340 in Kuwait. Loan service personnel are employed on a variety of military assistance tasks for the following overseas governments (as at 31 March 1991):

Antigua
Australia
Bahrain
Bangladesh
Barbadoes
Belize
Bermuda
Brunei
Colombia
Dominica
Gambia
Ghana
Grenada
Hong Kong
Jordan
Kenya
Lesotho
Malaysia
Mauritius
Namibia
New Zealand
Oman
Qatar
Saudi Arabia
Singapore
St. Lucia
St. Vincent
Swaziland
Turks and Caicos Islands
United Arab Emirates

Details of tasks and numbers of loan service personnel are normally confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government concerned.

"Panorama"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the BBC "Panorama" programme on weapons development and arms sales, broadcast on 24 June.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has a copy of this programme.

Low Flying

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the crashes and fatalities that have occurred in Wales involving low-flying military aircraft in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Between 1 January 1981 and 27 June 1991 there were the following aircraft accidents involving low-flying military aircraft in Wales:

Date	Aircraft	Location	Fatalities
12 February 1982	RAF Harrier	8 nautical miles South of Corwen	1
22 April 1982	RAF Jet Provost	Nant-y-Moch Reservoir	0
13 May 1982	RAF Hunter	2 nautical miles North West of Claerwen Reservoir	0
5 August 1982	RAF Hunter	4 nautical miles North West of Carmarthen	0
20 April 1983	RAF Gazelle	2 nautical miles North East of Snowdon	2
17 June 1986	WGAF Tornado	Near Claerwen	2
24 July 1986	USAF Phantom	St. Bride's Bay	2
24 June 1987	RAF Jaguar	3 miles South East of Builth Wells	1
26 August 1987	RAF Phantom	8 nautical miles South of Aberystwyth	2
6 February 1990	USAF A10	Capel-y-ffin	1
9 May 1990	RAF Hawk	2 KM North West of RAF Valley	0
10 May 1991	RN Sea Harrier	Near RAF Caerwent	0

Land Holdings (Scotland)

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the amount of land owned or leased by the Ministry in Scotland on a regional basis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 1 April 1991, the total area, in hectares, of land and foreshore owned or leased by the Ministry of Defence in Scotland by region was:

	Hectares
Highland	5,210
Strathclyde	5,200
Dumfries and Galloway	4,209
Grampian	2,207
Tayside	1,454
Western Isles	1,339
Fife	1,328
Lothian	1,160
Central	80
Shetland Islands	46
Orkney Islands	5
Borders	—

All areas of leased land included in the totals are subject to leases of three years or more: those of shorter duration are regarded as temporary and not recorded centrally.

Vacant Property

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all those MOD properties in the Plymouth area, including Caradon, that are vacant at present; what is the length of time that they have been unoccupied; and what are his intentions for these properties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As at 31 March 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, 486 married quarters and seven Ministry of Defence civilian properties in the Plymouth area, including Caradon, were vacant. Of the married quarters 435 had been vacant for less than a year, 15 had been vacant for between one and two years and 36 had been vacant for over two years. The seven civilian properties had all been vacant for over six months. In addition, 130 dwellings were in the process of being sold. It is our policy to dispose of all housing which is surplus to our long-term requirements. However, not all empty properties are surplus to requirements; many are either undergoing or awaiting major maintenance work or modernisation and some are already allotted to service families who are due to move in shortly.

Injured Grenadiers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 25 June to the hon. Member for Bristol, East (Mr. Sayeed), what action had been taken, or will be taken, to prevent the recurrence of the accident in July 1989 to the Grenadier Guardsmen, Hicks, Povey and Ray; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are comprehensive arrangements for ensuring the safety of soldiers during live-firing exercises. The board of inquiry into this tragic accident considered that "no amount of procedures, order, practices or briefings could have prevented the accident" and that

"the accident represents one of the dangers associated with training with live ammunition on any training range".

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to ensure that the pension arrangements of Guardsman Hicks will be adequate for his housing, transport facilities and other capital needs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 28 June 1991]: Mr. Hicks is receiving a pension under the armed forces pension scheme and a war disablement pension at the 100 per cent. rate, plus clothing allowance and mobility supplement; the latter is to help specifically with the extra cost of getting about. In addition, constant attendance allowance and comforts allowance have been awarded. I understand that he is also receiving unemployment benefit. These payments total over £260 tax-free per week. He has also received lump sum payments under the armed forces pension scheme totalling £6,501·69.

Stump Socks

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many special socks have been provided to Guardsmen Povey, Hicks and Ray; and if he will make it his policy to supply such special socks free on demand.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 June 1991]: Further to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence on 24 June, supplies of stump socks are available from individual health authorities on request. I am pleased to say that the men in question have used this service fully.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has carried out or is planning to carry out television advertising and other publicity campaigns costing more than £100,000 on the following topics in the year ending 31 March 1992:

Royal Navy

Production of a television recruitment advertising and television advertising campaign.

Army

Production of a television/cinema recruiting advertisement and television/cinema advertising campaign.

Territorial Army

1. A combined TV/Press recruitment campaign highlighting the range of weekend activities in the Territorial Army.
2. A press campaign to recruit specialist personnel.

Tri-Service

1. Press campaign to thank employers for releasing Volunteer Reserve Forces personnel for service during the Gulf crisis.
2. Campaign to increase public awareness of Volunteer Reserve Forces and employers' support for them.

TRANSPORT

Piracy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year for the last 10 years, and by location, the number of incidents of piracy at sea involving United Kingdom merchant seafarers.

Mr. McLoughlin: Shipowners, flag states and coastal states are encouraged to report incidents of piracy to the International Maritime Organisation. When we are advised of incidents involving British ships we report them to the International Maritime Organisation. However, it is not mandatory to report incidents of piracy so records may be incomplete. Nor is it possible to identify from the reports that are made if British seafarers serving on foreign flag vessels were victims of piracy. The reports made to the International Maritime Organisation indicate that since 1984 there were 11 incidents of piracy involving British ships:

Year	Number	Location
1984	2	Singapore (2)
1985	1	Singapore
1987	6	Singapore (4) Indonesia India
1988	1	Brazil
1989	1	Sri Lanka

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by year for the last 10 years, and by location, the number of United Kingdom merchant seafarers who have been (a) killed, (b) injured and (c) reported missing after attacks of piracy on the high seas.

Mr. McLoughlin: No British seafarer serving on a British ship has been reported killed or missing as the result of an act of piracy in recent years. Information regarding injuries or about British seafarers serving on foreign flag vessels is not available.

International Maritime Bureau

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last had discussions with officials of the International Maritime Bureau; what was discussed; when he next expects to have discussions with officials from the International Maritime Bureau; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have not met the International Maritime Bureau and have no plans to do so.

British Rail (Inflammable Goods)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss measures to ensure that the inquiry into the derailment of a freight train carrying inflammable goods at Bradford on Tone on 16 May proceeds with expedition and the steps which will be taken to ensure that hon. Members are notified of any preliminary conclusion from this inquiry as soon as possible.

Mr. McLoughlin: British Rail is carrying out an internal inquiry into this derailment. It will send a full report to the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate, which is also holding a technical investigation into the accident. BR reports, and those of investigations under section 20 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, are not normally published, but I have asked the chief inspecting officer to let me know the conclusions of the investigations. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Northolt Airport

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans for the use of Northolt airport by civil aircraft.

Mr. McLoughlin: RAF Northolt is used by both military and civil aircraft. There are no plans to alter this arrangement.

Passenger Safety

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he intends taking following the Clapham rail crash to ensure that the safety lessons learnt in one section of the transport world are passed on to other travel modes.

Mr. Freeman: We shall continue to ensure that accidents are thoroughly investigated and that any wider lessons are identified and applied across the modes.

Flight Delays, London-Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on any delays caused by Madrid air controllers to flights between London and Gibraltar that can be attributed to non-operational reasons.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am not aware of any such delays.

Ferries (Safety)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research there is available to his Department into passenger safety on ferries; and which of these receive funds from Government.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The Secretary of State sponsored a comprehensive research programme in 1988 aimed at enhancing the survivability standards of roll on/roll off passenger ferries. The initial phase of that programme was completed last year. Copies of the reports were sent to interested parties and a report giving an overview of the whole programme was placed in the House of Commons Library.

Government-funded research has also been undertaken in recent years to study the effect of damage to roll on/roll off passenger ferries in shallow waters; to investigate the evacuation of passengers from roll on/roll off passenger ships and to produce a risk analysis.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give (a) the total number of ferries using British ports, (b) those over 10 years old and (c) those over 25 years old for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1991]: Figures for 1990-91 for roll on/roll off passenger ferries using United Kingdom ports are set out below. Figures for earlier years are not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

	1990	1991
Over 10 years old	[1]85	[1]89
Over 25 years old	8	9
Total	113	110

[1] Figure includes vessels over 25 years old.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reported shipping accidents there were (a) in British waters and (b) involving British ships; and if he will give the number and percentage of those involving ferries for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The statistics maintained do not distinguish between shipping accidents in United Kingdom and non-United Kingdom territorial waters.

(b) The number of reported accidents worldwide involving United Kingdom registered merchant vessels over 100 gross tonnes for the period 1981 to 1990 is:

Year	Number of United Kingdom vessel accidents
1981	430
1982	413
1983	284
1984	269
1985	237
1986	188
1987	152
1988	190
1989	210
1990	183

The number of reported accidents involving United Kingdom registered passenger and/or cargo ro-ro ferries worldwide for 1989 and 1990 (the only years for which figures are readily obtainable) is:

	1989	1990
Number of ro-ro ferry accidents	42	44
Number of United Kingdom vessel accidents	210	183
Percentage of United Kingdom vessel accidents	20·00	24.04

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the Government risk analysis figures for United Kingdom ferry travel for (a) collisions involving a ferry, (b) a collision induced capsize, (c) flooding and (d) ferry fires for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of accidents on United Kingdom passenger ferries recorded in a recent risk analysis study for the period 1 January 1978 to 30 April 1988 was as follows:

(a) four collisions; 1980, 1982, 1983 and 1987

(b) one collision leading to capsize; 1982

(c) one flooding; 1987, and

(d) seven serious fires; 1979, 1981, 1982, 1983 (two) and 1988 (two).

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The following topics are expected to be the subject of television campaigns in the current financial year:

Child road safety

Drinking and driving

The following other topics are expected to be the subject of campaigns costing over £100,000 in the current financial year:

Transport and the environment

Coastguard advice for users of coastal waters

Road Traffic Act

"Safety on the Move" exhibition programme.

ENERGY

British Coal

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the British Coal complaint to the European Commission on the dumping of coal in the Community.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: It is for the European Commission to consider British Coal's complaint and take action if necessary. The Commission has not, at this stage, reached a decision on whether to launch a formal investigation.

Coopers and Lybrand

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library details of the advice he received from Coopers and Lybrand between July 1989 and April 1990 on salaries appropriate for the privatised electricity industry.

Mr. Wakeham: No. Advice given to the Secretary of State is confidential.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Race Relations (Legal Aid)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General if he will extend legal aid to discrimination cases involving race relations; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Legal advice and assistance from a solicitor is available under the green form scheme, subject to the normal financial conditions, where there is no reasonable expectation of an applicant obtaining help from an alternative source such as a trade union or the Commission for Racial Equality.

In addition, where civil remedies are sought under the Race Relations Act 1976, legal aid is available for legal representation in county court proceedings, under the normal conditions.

Maguire Judgment

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will arrange for a copy of the Maguire judgment to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

The Attorney-General: The approved transcript of the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the Maguire case is not yet available. I will cause copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses of Parliament as soon as it is received.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Capital Flows

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide the latest available information on inward and outward capital flows between the United Kingdom and other EC member states and the United Kingdom and north America for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Maples: Information by country on direct investment abroad by United Kingdom companies and by overseas companies in the United Kingdom is given in tables 5 and 9 of CSO Bulletin 33/91 "Overseas Direct Investment 1989". Figures for earlier years are given in the "Business Monitor MA4 (Overseas Transactions)". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Some additional information on capital transactions with countries and institutions of the European Community is given in the published annual Pink Books on the United Kingdom balance of payments and is available from the CSO databank, both of which are available in the Library.

Advertising Agencies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which advertising agencies were on the Central Office of Information approved list in 1986; which have been added in each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement on how the system works.

Mr. Maples: The Central Office of Information does not keep a list of approved advertising agencies. Advertising agencies are appointed to work for Government following competitions between agencies nominated by the Advisory Committee on Advertising. The advisory committee is an independent group of media and marketing professionals appointed to advise on the nomination of suitable advertising agencies for Government work.

Woolwich Tax Model

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on which day or days, in any hearing, counsel for the Inland Revenue challenged the Woolwich tax model of the effects of regulations 3 and 11 (1985).

Mr. Maples: The Inland Revenue's response, challenging the conclusions of the Woolwich building society based on its hypothetical tax model, was set out in affidavits which were in evidence in all the courts up to the House of Lords.

THE ARTS

Provincial Amateur Orchestras

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the provincial amateur orchestras encouraged by his Department.

Mr. Renton: Last year no fewer than 132 amateur orchestras, as listed, received support from the English regional arts associations and the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils.

Support for amateur orchestras by the regional arts associations and the Scottish and Welsh Arts Councils is usually through the payment of the fees of professionals working with the orchestras. Some organisations pay support directly to the orchestras; others channel the support through independently constituted bodies like the Welsh Amateur Music Federation.

I have listed the orchestras supported in this way by the original funding agency.

British Library

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the progress of the new British Library building at St. Pancras.

Mr. Renton: I am happy to announce the timely completion of the first of a number of major handover targets which will be taking place over the next 18 months at St. Pancras. Basement 4, the deepest of the book storage basements, is essentially ready for occupation by the British Library. This achievement reflects great credit on PSA services and its design and construction teams as well as on all those who are associated with the construction of this magnificent building. The project is thus on schedule and the present prediction is that it will be completed within budget.

ENVIRONMENT

Contaminated Land

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that local authorities have adequate resources to compile registers on contaminated land sites.

Mr. Baldry: The estimated costs of compiling registers of land which may be contaminated will be taken into consideration in the local authority finance settlement for 1992-93.

Integrated Pollution Control

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the effect on pollution of the decision to delay the implementation of the new system of integrated pollution control under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Baldry: Integrated pollution control was introduced by part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, for which Royal Assent had originally been expected by July 1990. In the event, there was some slippage in the legislative process, mainly as a result of extended consideration at Committee stage in this House, and Royal Assent was not obtained until November.

When it became apparent that Royal Assent would be later than had been anticipated, we announced that implementation of the IPC system, originally planned for 2 January 1991, would be delayed to allow an adequate period for consultation with interested parties and the public on guidance notes and regulations to be issued.

My right hon. Friend has made no estimate of the effect that this slight delay in implementation has had on pollution; IPC came into operation on 1 April 1991, and all the prescribed processes will be phased into the system over the next five years.

Catalytic Reductions

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to establish a selective catalytic reduction system in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: Selective catalytic reduction is one of a number of techniques for reducing emissions of nitrogen oxide from combustion plant, and guidance to inspectors from the chief inspector, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution suggests that it is one of the abatement options which operators of large combustion plant should consider.

Toxic Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of hazardous and toxic waste is (a) produced and (b) processed by each member country of the EC.

Mr. Baldry: There are at present no reliable figures on the production and processing of hazardous and toxic waste in member states of the EC. However, authoritative figures should be available in the future. EC directive 91/156 requires the competent authority or authorities of member states to draw up waste management plans indicating, among other things, the type, quantity and origin of waste to be recovered or disposed of; any special arrangements for particular wastes; and suitable disposal sites or installations. The directive will come into force on 1 April 1993. In addition, the statistical office of the European Communities (EUROSTAT) is undertaking a study on waste statistics as part of its current four-year work programme. It is estimated that in 1989-90 the United Kingdom generated between 2 and 2·5 million tonnes of special waste—the United Kingdom definition of hazardous and toxic waste—which were disposed of outside the premises of production.

Housing, Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many housing units were built in Tower Hamlets each year from 1961 to 1990 by (a) boroughs, (b) London-wide authorities, (c) housing associations, (d) other public sector and (e) the private sector.

Mr. Yeo: The London borough of Tower Hamlets has not sent the Department any statistical returns about housebuilding in its area since 1984. The available information is shown in the table.

[1] The London borough of Tower Hamlets was established in 1965. It comprised the metropolitan boroughs of Bethnal Green, Poplar and Stepney. Figures for total housing completions in these three boroughs are shown for the period 1961 to 1965.
[2] Figures show number of dwellings completed by the authority and some of these may have been outside the borough.
[3] Completions by London county council (ie prior to 1966) are not available by area of building.
[4] The Greater London council was established in 1965 and abolished in 1986.
[5] Prior to 1980 housing association and other public sector completions in the borough are not available separately. The figures have not been shown separately after that date as the local authority has reported nil activity under both headings.
[6] Private sector, borough and other public sector information covers ten months of the year only.

Sheltered Housing

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the management of sheltered leasehold housing.

Mr. Yeo: Since 1 January we have received 15 letters from hon. Members and five from leaseholders themselves. These have dealt with various matters relating to the management of sheltered housing; the most common issue has been the freeholder's selection of managing agents.

Retirement Leaseholders

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the National Alliance of Retirement Leaseholders; and what points were discussed.

Mr. Yeo: I with my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Sir. T. Taylor) met representatives of the National Alliance of Private Retirement Leaseholders on 15 May. We discussed the management of sheltered accommodation, and, in particular, problems arising from the appointment of managing agents by the landlord and the feasibility of giving leaseholders a right to appoint managers themselves.

Politically Restricted Posts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people currently hold politically restricted posts as defined by the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Mr. Portillo: My Department does not collect this information. I understand, however, that there are in the region of 35,000 politically restricted posts in the local government service in England.

South Park School, Lincoln

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his decision to call in the planning application submitted on behalf of Lincolnshire county council for the erection of dwellings at South Park school, Lincoln, application No. LHO4/0219/91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Secretary of State has not called in this application. On 20 June the Department's east midlands regional office issued an article 14 direction preventing the county council from granting itself deemed consent for this proposal without special authorisation. This was done to enable the Secretary of State to examine the proposal in detail before deciding whether or not to call it in for his own determination.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that mentally handicapped adults and children moving into a local authority area shall carry with them a sum of money for local authority grant purposes taken from the area they have left and transferred to their new local authority in the year after they have moved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 1 July 1991]: In cases where a local authority has responsibility for such persons, financial arrangements resulting from moves to another area are a matter for the authorities concerned. A local authority's standard assessment will reflect, in due course, changes which influence the cost of providing a standard level of social services, including those for people with learning disabilities.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will show for each local authority (a) the budgeted increase or reduction in financial reserves for 1990-91 and 1991-92, expressed both in million pounds and pounds per adult, using the appropriate figure for relevant population and (b) political control in each of the above financial years.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 1 July 1991]: I have today arranged for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Bathing Water

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inland waterways have been designated as safe for swimming by Her Majesty's Government under the European Commission bathing water directive.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The criteria set for the identification of bathing waters in the EC directive are the number of bathers using the waters, and the provision of facilities such as car parks, toilets and changing facilities. No inland waters meet the definition of bathing water in the directive or the criteria for identification developed since the adoption of the directive.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate for local authority usable receipts in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Key [holding answer 1 July 1991]: I have made no estimate of local authority usable capital receipts for 1992-93. Local authorities have been asked to provide forecasts for 1991-92 and an estimate based on the available returns will be made shortly. I will provide this information as soon as it is available.

Household Waste

Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to promote the recycling of household waste.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend is bringing into force the duty on waste collection authorities to produce recycling plans on 1 August 1991. Authorities are being asked to submit their plans to him in draft by 1 August 1992.

We will be sending a copy of waste management paper No. 28 on recycling to all local authorities next week. The paper provides guidance on preparing recycling strategies and drawing up recycling plans. It will be available through HMSO.

We will also start consultation on our proposals for recycling credits next week. Copies of the consultation paper and the waste management paper will be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Portugal and Luxembourg

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, further to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, columns 390-91, if he will make a statement on the available data on volumes of exports for (a) Portugal and (b) Luxembourg.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department is not aware of any publication which provides export volume figures for Portugal or Luxembourg on an internationally comparable basis.

Eurostats calculates the volume series for member countries for internal Commission use, but they do not show Luxembourg separately because its trade figures are combined with Belgium.

European Community

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what sources of statistical data on trade figures of other EC member countries are available to his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The following sources of trade statistics for EC member countries are available to the Department: the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, the statistical office of the European Communities, the United Nations, the International Monetary Fund and the national statistics of each member country.

Link Initiative

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public funding was originally earmarked for the Link initiative when it was launched in 1986; how much was provided in the estimates for that and for each succeeding financial year; on which votes these estimates have been carried; how much has been disbursed on each such vote in each such financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply to this question on Link funding and expenditure, although the question as put cannot be answered without disproportionate cost. When the Link initiative was announced on 10 December 1986 by the then Prime Minister, the Government contribution was to be £210 million spread over five years. This assumed a roughly linear build-up to a steady-state Government funding target of £85 million per annum; the agreed planning figures for Departments are shown in table A. The first five programmes were announced in February 1988, and currently there are 28 programmes in existence; the Government commitment to them is £175 million, and table B shows the funding commitment of individual Departments to programmes.

Table C shows expenditure to date, which significantly lags work under way because participants are very slow in submitting claims for reimbursement. The total spent will be approximately double the Government expenditure by virtue of industry's own expenditure. There are now over 150 projects under way and nearly 100 more approved, at a total value of around £150 million. After a slow start, Link is now making good progress.

Industrial Design

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his plans for new legislation on industrial design.

Mr. Leigh: New legislation on the protection of industrial design came into force on 1 August 1989 as part of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, when the Government introduced a wholly new kind of protection in the form of an unregistered design right. Some changes were also made to the existing registered design system. The European Commission is currently examining the question of design protection with a view to issuing a consultative document.

Trade Marks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he has for action in relation to trade marks infringements;

(2) what plans he has to update the Trade Marks Act 1938.

Mr. Leigh: The Government's proposals for updating the law on trade marks, including the provisions concerning infringement of trade marks, were set out in the White Paper, "Reform of Trade Marks Law" (Cm. 1203), which was published last September. As stated in the White Paper, legislation to implement these proposals will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

Pharmaceutical Patents

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his most recent response to representations from the pharmaceutical industry for extension of its patent rights in the bracket of 10 to 20 years.

Mr. Leigh: On 12 June I confirmed to European Standing Committee B that the Government support the EC Commission's proposal to give supplementary protection certificates to patented medicinal products but with a maximum extension of five years and a limit of 13 years on the resulting effective protection.

Dangerous Animals

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many children aged under 16 years were (a) injured and (b) killed by (i) dogs and (ii) other animals in 1990.

Mr. Leigh: National estimates for numbers of injured children under 16 for 1988, the last year for which figures are available, are as follows:

	Number
Injuries from dog bites	56,000
Injuries involving other animals	34,000

Egypt

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assistance has been given by Her Majesty's Government to British companies since 1987 seeking contracts in Egypt.

Mr. Sainsbury: The full range of DTI export services is available to British companies wishing to do business in Egypt. ECGD cover for short-term business (up to 180 days) is available subject to payments being secured by an irrevocable letter of credit.

Units of Measurement

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation on phasing out the use of imperial units following the adoption of the 1989 amendment to the units of measurement directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Having considered the replies to my Department's consultation paper, I intend to amend the legislation on the units of measurement authorised for use in the United Kingdom, generally taking maximum advantage of the transitional arrangements in the directive, and accordingly to:

(i) cease to authorise after 31 December 1994, imperial units used for economic, public health, public safety and administrative purposes except for the units used for the purposes set out in (ii) and (iii);

(ii) cease to authorise after 31 December 1999:
- (a) the pound and ounce for goods sold loose from bulk;
- (b) the pint and fluid ounce for beer, cider, waters, lemonades and fruit juices in returnable containers;
- (c) the fathom for marine navigation; and
- (d) the therm for gas supply;

(iii) authorise the continued use, without time limit, of:
- (a) the mile, yard, foot and inch for road traffic signs and related distances and speed measurement;
- (b) the pint for dispensing draught beer and cider and for milk in returnable containers;
- (c) the troy ounce for transactions in precious metals; and
- (d) the acre for land registration purposes.

Metric units will continue to be authorised for use in the United Kingdom for economic, public health, public safety and administrative purposes.

Changes to other legislation which refers to imperial units of measurement will be a matter for the Government Departments and other bodies responsible for that legislation.

Defence Industries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what communication his Department has had with local authorities concerning the application of the European Community's Stride programme on the possibilities for conversion or technological reorientation of regional defence industries.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 13 June 1991]: At the moment, the details of the allocation of Stride money in the United Kingdom are still being agreed with the European Commission. Once this is finalised, the possible use of Stride for regional projects such as the reorientation of defence industries, will be discussed in the programme committee on which local authorities will be represented.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implementation of projects sponsored by the European Community's Sprint programme in the United Kingdom; how many companies and organisations are presently receiving support; and what assessment he has made of the benefit to the United Kingdom economy of the Sprint initiative.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 13 June 1991]: Sprint aims to stimulate technology transfer within the European Community. The programme has been in operation for six years. Over 100 United Kingdom companies and organisations are actively involved in Sprint, more than any other EC country. It is too early to judge the full benefits to the United Kingdom economy, but already over 260 agreements to transfer technology have been signed. United Kingdom companies are involved in a significant number of those agreements.

Output Prices

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in the prices of output since October 1990 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Germany.

Mr. Maples [holding answer 25 June 1991]: I have been asked to reply.

Between 1990 quarter 3 and 1991 quarter 1 the implied deflator of United Kingdom GDP rose by 2¼ per cent. and the implied deflator of GNP in Germany rose by 1 per cent. Both these figures are measured at market prices. The implied deflator of GDP measures the prices of the net output of total goods and services in the economy. Figures based on GNP have been used for Germany because they are the most comparable available.

WALES

Blind Students

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what arrangements are being made by his Department to ensure that examination papers for the GCSE are available in Braille;

(2) what is his Department's policy on ensuring that blind and partially sighted students have adequate access to the examination process.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for administering the examination process rests with individual examining boards. The joint council for the GCSE have issued guidance common to all examing groups to deal with pupils with disabilities such as a visual impairment. The Welsh Joint Education Committee issues GCSE and A-level papers in Braille when requested.

Employment Training

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to ensure that adults with learning difficulties in Wales are given adequate opportunities for employment training.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for ensuring appropriate provision under employment training now rests with training and enterprise councils (TECs). All TECs are required to address the need of adults with learning difficulties in their corporate and business plans. The additional resources for employment training announced on 19 June 1991 will be targeted on people with special training needs, in particular those with literacy and numeracy difficulties. In addition negotiations are taking place with two TECs in Wales to pilot centres to encourage trainees to improve basic literacy and numeracy and promote the use of City and Guilds Certificates in word power and number power.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wrongful Imprisonment

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the criteria by which he determines what level of compensation to pay to people who have been wrongfully imprisoned; and whether he has any plans to alter these criteria.

Mr. John Patten: When my right hon. Friend has determined that payment of compensation following a wrongful conviction is justified, the amount to be paid is assessed by an independent assessor. The assessor applies principles analogous to those governing the assessment of damages for civil wrongs.

The assessment takes account of both pecuniary and non-pecuniary loss arising from the conviction and/or loss of liberty, including matters such as damage to character or reputation, hardship (including mental suffering) and inconvenience, loss of earnings and future earning capacity, legal costs, and other additional expenses arising in consequence of detention including expenses incurred by the immediate family

We have no plans at present to amend these arrangements.

Taxi Drivers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will outline the procedures used by the Metropolitan police to vet taxi drivers, describe the offences for which licenses are refused and outline the appeals procedure open to the driver; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applicants for cab drivers' licences are required to declare any previous convictions to the Public Carriage Office of the Metropolitan police. Appliations are checked against the national collection of criminal records. In considering whether or not to grant a licence regard is paid to the seriousness of any offences and to how long ago they were committed. A right of appeal against the refusal of a licence is contained in section 17 of the Transport Act 1985.

Police Records

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legislation is required to implement the police national computer network, the new criminal record system or the integration of police criminal information systems in general; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The need for legislation is one of the matters which is considered in preparing the case for new national information services for the police. It is presently being considered in relation to both a police national network and a new national criminal records system and would need to be examined in any proposal for the integration of police criminal information systems.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each category found in the wanted and missing persons index of the police national computer; and whether he can include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each category in the index over the year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Category		Current
Wanted		33,192
Fails to Appear		36,544
Suspect		21
Impending Prosecution		77
Deserter		1,367
Locate		51,582
Missing		2,460
Found		15
Absconder	—from care	484
	—from hospital	81
	—from detention	4
	—from youth custody	112
	—from prison	1,140
	—from remand	11
	—from school	36
Recall	—from detention	0
	—from youth custody	2
	—from prison	319

Figures on the minimum and maximum size of each category over the past year are not available.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many subject access requests were made under the Data Protection Act 1984 to the Metropolitan police for each year since 1987; and what proportion were made to criminal records.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the number of subject access requests made to the Metropolitan police in each year since 1987 was as follows:

Year	Number
1988	423
1989	1,131
1990	1,647

[1] March.

Statistics are not kept on the proportion of requests which relate to criminal records, but it is estimated that the vast majority of requests were for this purpose.

The vast majority sought access to criminal names.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each index of the police national computer; and whether he can include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each index over the last year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Index	Current size
Vehicle owners	39,017,200
Stolen vehicles	547,332
Chassis-engine numbers	914,274
Wanted/missing persons	131,948

Criminal names	5,783,622
Fingerprints	4,270,292
Crime pattern analysis	110,059
Extremists crime index	1,152
Major investigations	330,939

Information on the minimum and maximum size of each index over the last year has not been collected because of other essential work on preparing the database for its transfer to the new police national computer.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of accesses made to the police national computer by each constabulary in Great Britain over the last year; and whether he can give the proportion of access requests made to the vehicle indexes of the police national computer.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics he has as to the number of subject access requests made to criminal records held by the Metropolitan police or the police national computer that have been made for vetting purposes; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No statistics are available on this matter as applicants seeking subject access do not have to give reasons for their requests.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accesses were made to each index of the police national computer over the last year; and whether he will include in these statistics an indication of the number of access requests that could search more than one index.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total number of accesses to each of the indices of the police national computer in the year to 31 May 1991 was as follows:

	Index	Number of accesses
1.	Stolen and Suspect Vehicles	22,771,400
2.	Vehicle Owners
3.	Chassis/Engine Numbers	453,842
4.	Fingerprints	194,074
5.	Fingerprints (Scenes of Crime)	13,021
6.	Criminal Names[1]	2,017,903
7.	Wanted/Missing Persons	2,144,103
8.	Disqualified Drivers	725,448
9.	Convictions	956,352
10.	Major Investigations	1,302
11.	Crime Pattern Analysis	296,535

There have also been the following joint accesses:

	Number
To indices 6 and 9[2]	2,017,903
To indices 6, 7 and 9	1,534,343
To indices 6, 7, 8 and 9	8,460,357
To indices 4, 6 and 9	606,569

[1] The figure for the year to June 1990 was 1,996,349 and not 1,094,072 as incorrectly given on 19 July 1990 at column 664.

[2] All access to the criminal names index will in addition automatically generate information from the convictions application.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each category found in the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the police national computer; and whether he can include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each category in the index over the year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information requested is as follows:

Category	Current
Confirmed lost or obtained by deception	437,847
Lost or stolen	447,634
Obtained by deception	18
Found	31,712
Removed	16,764
Street to street	152
Repossessed by finance company	0
Suspect	42
Police vehicle	3,037
Blocked	6,980
Information	20,486
Seen	8,021

Information on the minimum and maximum of each category over the last year has not been collected because of other essential work on preparing the database for transfer to the new police national computer.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many subject access requests were made under the Data Protection Act 1984 to the police national computer for each year since 1987; and what proportion were made to the criminal names index.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
1987	82
1988	2,628
1989	8,758
1990	13,848
[1]1991	8,413

[1]31 May.

Nearly all were made of the criminal names index, save in 1987 when the proportion was under 50 per cent.

Passport Offices

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the decision was taken to send passport applications from Peterborough to Belfast;

(2) how many unopened letters are there on a daily basis at each of the passport offices;

(3) how many unopened passport applications there are at the Peterborough office.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: These questions have been passed to the chief executive of the United Kingdom Passport Agency who will reply shortly. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Police Station, Rutland

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on his Department's funding for the building of the new police station in Oakham, Rutland; and when it is scheduled to be completed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that work on the new police station at Oakham began in April and is expected to be completed in October 1992 at a cost of £1,125,000. This expenditure will be eligible for Home Office grant of 51 per cent.

Race Relations Act

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bring forward legislation to extend the provisions of the Race Relations Act to all areas of governmental and regulatory activity, including the immigration, police and prison services; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 75 of the Race Relations Act 1976 states that the provisions of the Act as a whole apply to actions done by Ministers and Government Departments, and to actions done on their behalf, in the same way as they apply to the actions of a private person. It is for the courts to decide how the provisions should be interpreted.

If an on-duty police officer treats a person improperly on the grounds of that person's colour, race, nationality, or ethnic or national origin, he is committing an offence of racially discriminatory behaviour and can be disciplined under paragraph 9 of the police discipline code, which is set out in schedule 1 to the Police (Discipline) Regulations 1985.

The Commission for Racial Equality has recently launched a review of the 1976 Act; we will, of course, consider any recommendations which come out of the review, but at present we have no plans for legislation.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests he has received this year from local authorities for guidance on the enforcement of Sunday trading legislation.

Mrs. Rumbold: Between 1 January and 27 June this year inclusive we received, either directly or via hon. Members, 31 letters from local authorities about Sunday trading. Two of these specifically requested guidance on the enforcement of the Sunday trading provisions of the Shops Act 1950.

Boundary Commission

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the terms of reference for the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England, fourth general review; what is its timetable; and what is its progress to date.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Boundary Commission for England is carrying out its fourth general review of constituencies under the provisions of the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986. Under the Act, it is required to submit reports on all the constituencies in England to the Secretary of State not less than 10 nor more than 15 years after the submission of the previous such reports. The Commission is therefore required to report between February 1993 and February 1998.

Since the start of the review, in February, the Commission has obtained ward electorates from the 1991 electoral register. These have been updated to take account of ward changes up to 1 April. A list giving the electorate for each ward has been placed in the Library.

Later this month, the Commission will be considering its provisional recommendations for Cornwall, Devon, Dorset and Somerset; these will be published later this year.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list biographical details of each member of the Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is as follows:

The chairman of the Commission is the Speaker of the House of Commons.

The deputy chairman is Sir John Knox. He was called to the Bar in 1953, became a QC in 1979, and was appointed a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court in 1985. He is also a member of the Lord Chancellor's Law Reform Committee.

Miss Sheila Cameron QC was called to the Bar in 1957 and became a QC in 1983. She is a deputy High Court judge, recorder, and vicar-general of the province of Canterbury and a member of the parliamentary, planning and local government Bar.

Mr. David Macklin CBE is a former chief executive of Devon county council and has also held local government posts in Derbyshire and Lincolnshire.

EMPLOYMENT

Disability and Employment

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response has been made to the recommendations of the Employment Select Committee's first report of Session 1990-91 on disability and employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State wrote to the Chairman of the Select Committee on 15 January to express his pleasure at the participation of the Committee in the consultative process, to say that the Committee's comments will be given full consideration along with all others received and to commit himself to keeping the Committee informed on progress on all the issues they raised.

My right hon. and learned Friend wrote again on 17 April, to inform the Committee of the decision about the future development of the specialist services for people with disabilities which are provided by the Employment Services and to say that he believed that the changes which he announced would help to meet the concerns about disablement resettlement officers (DROs) expressed in the Committee's report.

The Committee will continue to be informed of appropriate decisions in line with the Secretary of State's commitment.

Earnings, Scotland

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, column 435-38; if he will provide the same information given in percentage form in terms of the absolute number of employees affected in each category.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Youth Training

Mr. Miscampbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YOP, YTS and youth training places were available in Lancashire for each year since 1978 to 1990.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is given in the following table. Information prior to 1985-86 is not readily available.

Youth training
Number of agreed places in Lancashire

At 31 March	Number
1986	7,100
1987	11,400
1988	15,800
1989	15,000
1990	13,900

Note: All figures are rounded to the nearest 100.
Source: SPECTRUM.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to ensure that adults with learning difficulties are given adequate opportunities for employment training.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils are required to set out in their business plans how they intend to offer suitable training to people with special needs, including learning difficulties. These plans form the basis of their contract with the Department. Those people joining employment training from the Government's guarantee and aim groups for long-term unemployed people will include substantial numbers of people with special training needs.

On 19 June the Secretary of State announced a package of measures including an additional £35 million for employment training, in particular to support training for people with special needs.

Disability Advisory Council

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will announce the membership of the new National Advisory Council on the Employment of People with Disabilities.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has appointed 12 new members and reappointed four existing members to the National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities for a period of three years from 1 July 1991. The chairman of the council is Mr. Alan Smith MBE, FIPM, FBIM, FinstD. His appointment runs until 31 December 1992, and has not been affected by the new appointments.

The members of the council are:

Members appointed after consultation with organisations representing employers

Mr. P. T. G. Hobbs MA (Oxon), FIPM, FInstD.
Mr. R. C. Spoor OBE, RD, DCL, (Hon), DL, FCA
Mr. A. Wild BA (Hons), MIPM

Members appointed after consultation with organisations representing workers

Mr. W. Anderson BSc (Econ), FLA
Mr. R. D. Exell
Mr. P. E. Gallant BSc, ARCS, C Chem, FRSC

Other Members

Ms. C. M. Ashton BSc (Hons)
Mr. I. Bruce BSocSc, FBIM
Mr. J. Denholm
Dr. A. Fingret MBBS, MFOM
Mr. P. Large MBE, CBE
Mr. P. MacDonald
Mr. W. H. Massie OBE
Dr. C. N. Morton CEng, MICE, MIPM
Mr. T. V. F. Pape BSc
Ms. S. Scott-Parker BA

The council has always provided valuable advice and assistance on issues concerning the employment and training of people with disabilities and I am sure that with the new membership it will continue to do so.

Textiles and Footwear Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what measures he intends to take to encourage the creation of alternative employment for textile and footwear workers who have been made redundant, with particular reference to the east midlands;

(2) what measures he intends to take to reverse the employment trends that have occurred in the textile and footwear industry since 1979.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 1 July 1991]: It is the private sector that will create alternative employment for textile and footwear workers made redundant in the east midlands or elsewhere. The work force in employment in the east midlands rose by 263,000 in the period March 1983 to December 1990.

The Department supports a number of initiatives in the textile and footwear industries aimed at increasing skill levels, meeting skill shortages, and strengthening the industries' ability to export.

The full range of services and facilities of the Department, the employment service, and the training and enterprise councils is available to assist employees who lose their jobs in the textile and footwear industry and other industries to find, and train for, alternative employment.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Correspondence

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will remind all Ministers of the requirement that with all ministerial replies to Members' letters, a copy of the Minister's letter must always be enclosed.

The Prime Minister: I have asked my hon. Friend the Patronage Secretary to write to Ministers' offices.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 2 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

University Funding

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will meet Sir Edward Parkes, chairman of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, to discuss university funding.

The Prime Minister: I have told the CVCP that I am ready to meet them in due course to discuss their proposals for achieving the desired expansion of higher education with greater efficiency.

Information Bulletin

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of the information bulletin on the activities of the United Kingdom delegation to the parliamentary assemblies of the Council of Europe and the assembly of the Western European Union which has been sent to him.

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

HEALTH

Maternity Services

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many maternity beds are available in each district health authority per 1,000 births;

(2) what is the number of special care baby cots in each district health authority per 1,000 births.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is given in the following table. It should be noted that some health authorities provide special care facilities for neonates within maternity units. In these cases the cots are not counted separately and are therefore not included in the table.

Sickle-cell Disease

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by regional health authority, and by district health authority, the facilities provided for (a) sickle-cell counselling, (b) sickle-cell opportunist screening, (c) sickle-cell ante-natal screening and (d) sickle-cell post-natal screening.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Menopause

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to undertake a national survey to determine the numbers of women who suffer unpleasant symptoms during the menopause; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. It is the experience of clinicians working in this field that about a quarter of women will have no menopausal symptoms, about half will have some symptoms, and the remainder will have symptoms severe enough to require medical treatment.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for 1990 for the residents of (a) England and (b) each NHS region and district within England (i) the number of live births, (ii) the percentage of live births with unstated birthweight, (iii) the number of live births with stated birthweight and (iv) the percentages of these which were under 1000g, 1000g to 1499g, 1500g to 1999g, 2000g to 2499g, 2500g to 2999g, 3000g to 3499g, 3500g to 3999g and 4000g and above.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Brook Hospital

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings Ministers have had with local campaigners concerning the Brook hospital.

Mr. Dorrell: I met my hon. Friend and local campaigners on 14 February.

Mentally Handicapped People

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to local authorities in respect of services they provide for people with a mental handicap and the role of specialist mental handicap nurses in the provision of such services.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department recently issued for consultation a draft circular giving specific guidance to local authorities on services for people with learning disabilities (mental handicap) together with a parallel draft health circular on the role of the NHS in providing health care for this client group. There is a long-term requirement for trained mental handicap nurses and we are currently considering with professional and other interests how nurses' skills and experience can best be made available in the new pattern of services.

Elderly People

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether under the terms of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, elderly people will be (a) given the opportunity to contribute to and comment on any care plan drawn up for them, (b) entitled to the help of an advocate if so desired to comment and contribute to any care plan drawn up for them and (c) offered a choice of services within the care plan.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In both the policy guidance and the forthcoming practice guidance on care management and assessment, strong emphasis is given to enabling potential users of services of all ages to participate in the assessment process and to contribute to their care plan, with any points of difference between the assessor and the user being recorded. Local authorities will also be encouraged in the practice guidance to encourage advocacy support where people are unable to speak for themselves and have no other friend or relative to speak on their behalf.

The promotion of choice and independence underlies the whole community care reform programme. The assessment and care management process will encourage choice, with assessors providing information on services available across both the statutory and independent sectors.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would be the estimated cost of inoculating all children of school age against the hepatitis B virus.

Mr. Dorrell: No accurate assessment exists of the cost of this proposal.

NHS Facilities (Gedling)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional medical facilities in the national health service have been made available to the residents of the Gedling constituency during the last 10 years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. D. H. White, chairman of the Nottingham health authority, for details.

Waiting Lists

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the Government's response to the report of the Health Select Committee on waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's response to the first report of the Select Committee on Health (Session 1990-91) ("Public Expenditure on Health Services: Waiting Lists") (HC 429) is being laid before the House today as Cm. 1586. Copies are available in the Vote Office. It will be published by HMSO in due course.

Medical Services Committees

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will issue a circular to family health services authorities advising them of the importance of seeking the views of local medical committees prior to appointing medical services committees; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the proportion of overseas qualified doctors on medical services committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974 (S.I. 1974 No. 455) provide that local medical committees shall appoint the medical members of medical service committees and that if dissatisfied with the appointment of the lay chairman, they may require the family health services authority to refer the matter to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. Information is not available centrally on the representation on medical service committees of doctors qualified overseas. Guidance on the constitution of service committees and the appointment of members was included in letters FPCL190/90 and FPCL(W)83/90 issued to health authorities in September 1990. Copies of the letters have been placed in the Library.

Doctors (EC Employment)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the arrangements within the European Community relating to the employment within the Community of overseas qualified doctors who have the status of British citizens and who are fully registered medical practitioners in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: We are aware of the difficulties that British citizens who are fully registered and hold overseas qualifications may experience in gaining access to employment in other member states. The European Commission has only recently provided information on each member state's arrangements for recognising overseas qualifications and we have not properly assessed them yet. The arrangements are currently being discussed in Brussels as part of an initiative by the Commission to examine the difficulties associated with recognition of overseas qualifications. We are represented at the discussions.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make representations in the EC Council of Ministers for the equal treatment in Community law of all British citizens who are fully registered medical practitioners in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: All British citizens have the right to establish themselves in any country of the Community. The main difference in the treatment of British citizens which relates to my responsibilities concerns medical practitioners who are fully registered but hold non-EC qualifications and the recognition of these qualifications by other member states. We are aware that Community citizens holding qualifications obtained outside the Community which are recognised in one state may experience difficulty in persuading other member states to accept them. However, the European Commission has begun an assessment of member states' arrangements for recognition of non-EC qualifications held by EC nationals. We are involved in the current discussions between member states on this complex issue.

Special Diets

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that children and other patients who are required to follow a dairy and egg-free diet should be able to obtain the products they require under prescription; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not the function of the NHS to provide food products on prescription. We recognise that in some cases GPs may consider their active intervention is necessary to help patients keep to medically recommended diets. In such cases, GPs may prescribe from a range of specially manufactured food products recommended by the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances. These include products designed for the treatment of patients with lactose intolerance or whole protein intolerance and patients who have to follow a low protein diet.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he has made to the MENCAP report on day services, a copy of which has been sent to the Minister responsible for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department recently issued for consultation a draft circular on social care for people with learning disabilities supported by an annex giving draft guidance on the development of day services. Mencap was consulted during the preparation of these documents, and we shall take account of its latest report, and any additional documents from Mencap and others with an interest, when preparing the final version of the guidance.

Blood Products

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give figures for the charges made for the collection of blood and blood products by each regional transfusion centre;

(2) what guidance has been issued on the pricing of blood products.

Mr. Dorrell: No charge is made for blood which is freely donated by our volunteer donors. From 1 April it is our policy that regional transfusion centres (RTCs) should recover the cost of collecting, processing and transporting blood by levying handling charges on the user hospitals. Within this general policy it is for the regional transfusion centres, following consultation with the users to determine an appropriate structure for handling charges to recover their operating costs. Information about these individual arrangements is not held centrally.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of the national blood transfusion service.

Mr. Dorrell: We greatly appreciate the efforts of the national blood transfusion service (NBTS) and the altruism of our voluntary and unpaid donors for maintaining adequate blood supplies in this country. The last major change in the national blood transfusion service was the establishment in 1989 of the national directorate to co-ordinate the activities of the regional transfusion centres in relation to national policies and strategies for the blood supply. Organisation of the national blood transfusion service is kept under review.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Ambulance Council working party on the problems of lay serving ambulance staff; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have accepted the recommendations made by a working party set up by the Department to consider the problems of long-serving ambulance men and women and officials will be writing shortly to interested parties about implementation.

Heart Pacemakers

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the practice of charging bereaved relatives of patients who have died a fee for the removal, by a doctor at the hospital, of a heart pacemaker prior to cremation is customary throughout the United Kingdom;

(2) what provision exists under the national health service for the removal of pacemakers from the bodies of patients who have died while in hospital;

(3) under what authority doctors at Sandwell general hospital, West Bromwich, charge bereaved relatives a fixed fee for the removal of pacemakers from the bodies of patients who have died at the hospital.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 18 June 1991]: Central guidance on the removal of pacemakers from people who have died in hospital was issued in 1983 through Health Notice (83)6, a copy of which is available in the Library. The intention is that the health authority should meet the cost and that in no circumstances should bereaved relatives be charged. I understand that Sandwell health authority has reimbursed the relatives who were charged, and has apologised to them for the unnecessary distress caused by its action.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Severe Disability Premium

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason his Department is not paying severe disability premium to Mr. D. Wilkes of Perry Barr, Birmingham, awarded by the social security appeal tribunal on 8 January 1991, Ref. 401: 33475.

Miss Widdecombe: The severe disability premium is not being paid to Mr. Wilkes because the chief adjudication officer is appealing to the social security commissioner against the social security appeal tribunal's decision. Under regulation 37 of the Social Security (Claims and Payment) Regulations 1987 the award is not implemented pending the outcome of this appeal.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reason his Department is not paying disability premium from 11 April 1988 to Miss M. Hunt of Perry Barr, Birmingham, awarded by the social security appeal tribunal on 8 January 1991, Ref. 401: 33209.

Miss Widdecombe: The severe disability premium is not being paid to Miss Hunt because the chief adjudication officer is appealing to the social security commissioner against the social security appeal tribunal's decision. Under regulation 37 of the Social Security (Claims and Payment) Regulations 1987 the award is not being implemented pending the outcome of this appeal.

Benefit Cheques

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to change the arrangements so that claimants can more easily cash benefit girocheques for more than £75.

Miss Widdecombe: The arrangements for encashment of girocheques are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pensioners

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the financial amount deducted from pensioners in hospital longer than six weeks, for the last year for which figures are available; and what steps he is prepared to take to review this policy.

Miss Widdecombe: Most social security benefits, including retirement pensions and invalidity pensions, are reduced after the beneficiary has been in hospital for more than six weeks. The current reductions are £10·40 a week for those with dependants and £20·80 a week for those without dependants. A further reduction is made after the beneficiary has been in hospital for more than 52 weeks. At that stage, the benefit of those with dependants is reduced by a further £10·40, making £20·80 in all, and the benefit of those without dependants is reduced to the personal requirements rate of £10·40.

These provisions are based on the view that state funds should not make double provision for the same needs. As the national health service provides free maintenance as well as free treatment, maintenance benefits, also paid out of state funds, should not be paid in full indefinitely.

The policy on benefits paid to hospital in-patients was reviewed in 1987 as part of the social security review and we have no current plans to conduct a further review.

Child Benefit

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate for 1981 and for the latest available date through child benefit payments the numbers of (a) children and (b) children in lone parent households in Greenwich, Wandsworth and Lewisham.

Mr. Jack: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that information relating to child benefit is available only on a national basis and cannot be given for particular areas.

Non-Public Information

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the titles of guidance and procedural manuals produced for his Department's offices, other than local offices, which are not available to the public, and (b) in each case the reason for them not being available publicly.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department produces a large number of formal and informal guidance and procedural documents for its staff on a wide range of subjects. This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Philippines

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance Her Majesty's Government are giving to the people of the Philippines following the eruption of Mount Pinatubo.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made grants totalling almost £100,000 to two United Kingdom-based voluntary agencies. Our embassy is discussing with the Government of the Philippines their appeal of 27 June to identify what further help we can give locally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Animal Welfare

Dame Janet Fookes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking at the intergovernmental conference on political union to protect the welfare of animals.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The United Kingdom has proposed that the conference makes a declaration, noting that Community legislation on a wide range of subjects can affect the welfare of animals and calling on the Council, the Commission and the European Parliament to ensure that the Community, when taking any action which affects animals, pays full regard to their welfare requirements and their status as sentient beings.

Croatia and Slovenia

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government support the endeavours of Croatia and Slovenia to seek independence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We and our western partners have consistently made clear our preference for a single Yugoslav political entity, and have called on all Yugoslav republics to avoid unilateral actions which may jeopardise negotiations to secure a new basis for Yugoslav unity. But this cannot be brought about by force. We are opposed to intimidation or coercion of democratically elected Governments in Slovenia and Croatia, as elsewhere.

Albania

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will establish a United Kingdom mission in Albania; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to establish a resident British mission in Albania.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the provision of know-how or similar funding for Albania.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to extend the know-how fund to Albania.

Philippines

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what services are provided by Thomas Cook (Philippines) Inc. to the British embassy in Manila; whether these arrangements involve payments by United Kingdom citizens to Thomas Cook (Philippines) Inc. in respect of visa applications; whether any Filipino citizens applying for entry visas to the United Kingdom have been advised by the embassy to seek the assistance of Thomas Cook (Philippines) Inc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The British embassy in Manila has no official agreement with Thomas Cook (Philippines) Inc. to provide services either for officially funded travel or as a conduit for visa applications.

Thomas Cook is one of over 300 travel and shipping agents permitted to lodge visa applications at the embassy. Any charge they make for their services is a matter for the company and not the British Government.

Inquiries are occasionally received asking whether attendance in person is necessary to obtain a visa. Frequent travellers are advised that their applications can be submitted through a recognised travel agent, but the British embassy does not encourage the specific use of Thomas Cook or any other individual travel agent.

Weapons (Iraq)

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts the United Kingdom is making to deal with Iraq's remaining nuclear, chemical, biological weapon and missile capabilities.

Mr. Hurd: We took a prominent part in the establishment under Security Council resolution 687 of the special commission to ensure that Iraq's nuclear, chemical and biological weapons and ballistic missile capabilities are destroyed.

We continue to take an active role in supporting the special commission's work. We have made available: a senior British expert on chemical and biological defence matters to serve as a full-time member of the commission; three British experts for the first chemical weapons inspection in Iraq; an RAF explosives expert as adviser to the first ballistic missile inspection; one United Kingdom expert for the second IAEA inspection and two or more to take part in the third inspection. We have offered up to six inspectors to take part in the first biological weapons inspection and we intend to reinforce our embassy in Bahrain to liaise with the special commission's field office there.

We have also provided information on Iraq's weapons capabilities as well as minor items of equipment and RAF transport facilities, plus eight Land-Rovers and trailers. Further specialised equipment and support will be provided at an initial cost of up to £1 million, as stated in the answer of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs' on 19 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns). The facilities at the chemical and biological defence establishment, Porton Down will be used to analyse samples taken by the inspection teams.

We shall continue to support the special commission in carrying out its mandate, and encourage others to do likewise. It is important that Iraq should not be allowed to retain or redevelop these weapons of mass destruction.

Kuwait

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens have been assisted by the British embassy in Kuwait since it reopened to return to the United Kingdom for medical treatment following injuries sustained in clearing mines or other war-related explosives.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 24 June 1991]: None.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Offshore Islands

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many offshore islands are inhabited and what their population is.

Mr. Hanley: The latest available information is from the 1991 census of population taken on 21 April. The results are being collated for inclusion in a preliminary report to be published around the end of July. I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library when the information is available.

Public Order Offences

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the prosecutions under the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987 for incitement to (a) religious and (b) racial hatred, indicating the outcome in each case.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 26 June 1991]: I understand that no persons have been prosecuted under part III of the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Bale: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what would be the cost in 1991-92 of increasing the basic retirement pension by £5 per week for a single pensioner and £8 a week for a married couple, assuming similar increases in linked benefits and in income-related benefits for pensioners, giving figures (a) gross and (b) net of tax revenues and savings in other benefits.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 27 June 1991]: The gross cost in Northern Ireland of increasing the weekly basic retirement pension by £5 a week for a single pensioner and £8 a week for a married couple, assuming similar increases in linked benefits and in income-related benefits for all those receiving these increases, is £69·3 million. Net of income tax, the figure would be £64·8 million. A reliable estimate is not available of the cost, if those in receipt of a linked benefit but not the pensioner premium, did not receive a similar increase in their income-related benefit.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the clearing house arrangements under the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Fallon: As part of a package of measures to contain the costs of the assisted places scheme within the resources available, my right hon. and learned Friend has reluctantly decided that the proposed scheme for the redistribution of vacant places under clearing house arrangements, notified to schools earlier, cannot go ahead this year. The Government remain committed to the assisted places scheme and some 27,000 children are expected to have places under the scheme in the coming year.

Braille Exam Papers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds he makes available to examining boards to produce examination papers in Braille.

Mr. Eggar: None. The examining bodies cover the cost of producing papers in Braille by making a small addition to the examination entry fees of all candidates—whose fees are met, in the case of candidates from maintained schools, by the local education authorities.

South Park School, Lincoln

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the procedures by which he will decide whether to approve an application by Lincolnshire county council to reopen for educational purposes the former South Park school in Lincoln.

Mr. Fallon: If Lincolnshire county council wishes to establish a new school in the premises of the former South Park school, it will have to publish proposals under section 12 of the Education Act 1980. In considering whether to approve such proposals, my right hon. and learned Friend would take account of all relevant factors, including any objections to the proposals.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set out his reasons for turning down the proposal to establish a voluntary-aided city technology college on the site of the former South Park school, Lincoln.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has never been asked formally to consider a proposal to establish a voluntary aided school with city technology college characteristics in Lincoln.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will seek a report from Lincolnshire county council on the possible future use of the school playing fields adjacent to the site of the former South Park school, Lincoln; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: The disposal of surplus local authority land is a matter for the local authority concerned and the Secretary of State for the Environment. A planning policy guidance note on sport and recreation already issued in draft for consultation asks local authorities to review longer-term educational and community need before deciding on disposal of school playing fields.

Student Costs

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per pupil at primary and secondary schools in Cornwall and per student in further education colleges in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what were the comparable figures in 1978-79 at constant prices.

Mr. Fallon: In 1988-89, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available, net institutional expenditure per pupil in Cornwall was £1,010 in nursery and primary schools, £1,525 in secondary schools and £3,615 per student in further education. In 1978-79 net institutional expenditure per pupil in Cornwall was £325 in nursery and primary schools and £490 in secondary schools. At 1988-89 prices this represents some £710 and £1,085 respectively. Figures for net institutional expenditure per further education student in 1978-79 are not available.

SCOTLAND

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the allocation of ministerial responsibilities within his Department; if he has any plans to review these; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have no plans to review the allocation of ministerial responsibilities in my Department. The present allocation works well.

Local Authority Members

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has relating to the average number of hours per week devoted to public duties by members of Scottish local authorities; what plans he has to seek evidence of this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Research commissioned by the Widdicombe committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business was based on average hours per month rather than per week. This indicated that in 1976 and in 1985 regional and islands councillors spent on average 129 hours per month on council duties. The equivalent figures for district councillors were 92 hours per month in 1976 and 93 hours per month in 1985.

My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to update that research.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has plans to review the allowances or expenses paid to local authority councillors in Scotland for (a) remuneration, (b) recompense for lost salaries or wages, (c) subsistence allowance and (d) travelling expenses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: A new system of remuneration for councillors came into effect on 1 April 1991. Under the new arrangements, financial loss allowance is no longer available for councillors. The system will be reviewed after it has been in operation for about a year. In the interim my right hon. Friend intends to make regulations for Scotland which will counter abuse of the special responsibility allowance element of the new scheme which has been drawn to his attention.

The arrangements for travel and subsistence allowances are unchanged. Rates of all allowances will continue to be reviewed on a regular basis.

Local Government Services

Mr. McMaster To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to subject any further local government services to compulsory competitive tendering; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The Government are looking at ways of extending the range of local authority services subject to compulsory competitive tendering. Consultants have been appointed to examine and report on the technical feasibility of extending the legislative requirements for competitive tendering to the provision of professional services. Local government will be consulted about any proposals which emerge.

Johnstone Health Clinic

Mr. McMaster To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the development of the Johnstone health clinic.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have nothing to add at this time to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 13 February at column 454-55.

Political Advisers

Mr. McMaster To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of each political adviser working in the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: One special adviser is employed in the Scottish Office, Mr. Alan Young.

Royal Alexandra Hospital, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures have been taken to enhance security at the Royal Alexandra hospital in Paisley in the last six months; what further proposals will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The measures taken recently have been

- Security sub-committee established in January
- Report produced in February on improvements to be carried out
- Access to service corridors restricted from February
- All Staff sent a memorandum in February
- Meetings with Strathclyde police on crime prevention in May
- Each induction programme for new staff includes security session with local police
- Discussions with firm of security consultants during May
- Extra digital locks fitted to a number of internal and external doors
- Video cameras recording 24-hour period in respect of car park
- Full-time car park attendant appointed
- An extra portering round during evenings

Further measures in the process of being implemented are

- Staff identification system to be introduced in July
- Alarms for all doors leading to fire escapes to be fitted
- Locks for additional external doors
- Formal instruction to staff that misuse of fire doors is a disciplinary offence
- Further exhortation to staff to be vigilant at all times

These measures build on a range of security improvements which the local management has initiated over the past two years. The position is being kept under constant review and further steps will be taken if appropriate. The health board has assured me that all practical measures are being taken to ensure the security of patients, visitors and staff without being excessively restrictive.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review the annuality principle applied to local government finance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: No.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was raised by local authorities in Scotland in 1990-91 using their discretionary powers to raise £5 per head of adult population, in areas where there is a single tier of principal local authority, and £2·50 per head of adult population, in areas where there are two administrative tiers; and if he has made any assumptions for the likely yield under this power for 1991-92.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 1 July 1991]: In terms of section 83 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973, as amended by schedule 1 to the Abolition of Domestic Rates, Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, Scottish local authorities have a discretionary power to incur expenditure not exceeding the product of a 2p rate based on 1988-89 rate poundage.

Information about the extent of such expenditure is not held centrally.

Elderslie Hospital

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with Argyll and Clyde health board concerning the development of Elderslie hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Argyll and Clyde health board has submitted to my Department proposals which will enable the young handicapped patients residing in Elderslie hospital to live as normal a life as possible in a community environment. On 12 June I announced that the sum of £12·4 million is to be made available to Scotland's health boards in bridging finance to develop and expand care in the community in conjunction with local authorities. Argyll and Clyde health board have been allocated £764,000 over a three-year period to enable them to implement immediately their plans for fully supported community units for the young residents of Elderslie.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes in the incidence of unemployment have taken place in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) the Greenock travel-to-work area in each of the past 30 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is available on the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information if necessary.

HIV Tests

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the cost to the Scottish Office of financing the HIV ante-natal named testing study in Edinburgh and Dundee from 31 August 1990 to 31 March 1991; and what efforts were made to secure alternative funding for the study from 31 March 1991;

(2) if he will set out the reasons for ceasing to fund the HIV ante-natal named screening study in Edinburgh and Dundee on 31 March;

(3) if he will set out the Government's policy towards HIV named testing studies of the sort carried out in Edinburgh and Dundee ante-natal units.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This study began in December 1988 and received financial support from the Medical Research Council up to 31 August 1990. The Scottish Office provided £55,000 to support the study for a further seven months up to the end of March 1991 in order to maximise the benefits of the information which had been collected and to enable a reliable assessment to be made of HIV prevalence among pregnant women in Edinburgh and Dundee. The information collected in the study is now being analysed and a report is expected to be published in the autumn.

There are no plans for further named surveys of this kind to be conducted in Scotland, but I understand that the Medical Research Council has agreed to fund a further study in Edinburgh and Dundee, involving anonymised testing both of women attending ante-natal clinics and of women having termination of pregnancy. This study is expected to begin in September.

Agency Status

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those bodies currently with agency status within his Department under the "next steps" initiative; and whether he has identified any further candidates for agency status under the initiative within his Department.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 June 1991]: Three executive agencies have so far been established under the next steps initiative from within my responsibilities: the Registers of Scotland, Historic Scotland and the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency. I announced the candidature of the agricultural scientific services of the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department for agency status on Tuesday 16 April 1991 and further candidates will be brought forward in due course.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many abortions were performed in Scotland in the first 12 months of operation of the Abortion Act 1967 and in the latest year for which figures are available; and under what statutory grounds these abortions were performed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 June 1991]: The information requested on terminations under the Abortion Act 1967 is as follows:

	1 April 1968 to 31 March 1969	1990 (calendar year)
Risk to life of woman	110	36
Risk of injury to health of woman	1,892	9,962
Risk to health of existing children	126	95
Risk of abnormality of foetus	110	99
Emergency to save life of woman	3	—
Emergency to prevent injury to health of woman	3	—
Total	2,244	10,192

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 July 1991]: My Department has proposals to mount television information campaigns in 1991-92 on road safety and crime prevention. Planned campaigns costing £100,000 or more are proposed on fire prevention, children's hearings and right to buy. Detailed campaign planning, including media to be used, has yet to be decided on these topics.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Knacker Industry

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to draw up a code of practice to ensure the continuity of derogations from EEC regulations in respect of the knacker industry.

Mr. Maclean: A derogation in the directive on the disposal of animal waste (90/667 EEC), which we fought hard to achieve, permits the knacker industry to continue to sell petfood, at least until the end of 1995. In the meantime, proposals will be considered by the European Community by the end of 1992 in relation to the controls which might secure the longer-term future of this trade. Our officials are, therefore, currently reviewing with the knacker trade existing control measures.

EC Grants

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations in the EC Council of Ministers to remove the bar on payment of EC grants to farmers following late claims, and to replace the present rule with a discretion exercisable by himself; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have every sympathy with the efforts of the hon. Member on behalf of his constituents. He will be aware that we make every effort to ensure that our administration of EC schemes is sensitive to farmers' practical concerns, consistent with effectively addressing the risk of fraud. It is, however, important that there is comparability of treatment between producers in different member states and strictly applied Community-wide rules regarding claims received after the closing dates for the suckler cow premium scheme and the sheep annual premium scheme are necessary to ensure this. Giving a general discretion to the various national authorities responsible for administering these schemes to accept or reject late claims would undermine this important principle.

Dioxins

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will revert to the previously established lower safety level for dioxin.

Mr. Maclean: No safety limit was set prior to the work recently carried out for the World Health Organisation which established a provisional tolerable daily intake of dioxins.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the number of municipal and private incinerators where he has conducted tests for dioxins in England on (a) agricultural land or (b) products; what proportions these are of the total number of incinerators in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Dioxin levels have been measured in milk collected from farms in the vicinity of two of the four high-temperature chemical waste incinerators situated in England and Wales. The preliminary results fall within the range of background levels found in other industrial areas.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set up a public inquiry into the dioxin levels in milk in the Bolsover area.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 1 July 1991.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the maximum tolerable concentration of dioxins in nanogrammes per kilogramme of milk prior to its level being set at 0·7 nanogrammes.

Mr. Gummer: No prior figure was set.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) of 26 June, if he will list the names and positions of the scientific and medical experts which calculated the maximum tolerable concentration of dioxins in milk; whether they were members of any Government advisory committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The chairman of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) was consulted about the calculation of the maximum tolerable concentration of dioxins in milk and agreed the tolerance level set. The full set of results from the dioxins survey will be considered by the COT before publication later this year. In order to deal quickly with the enhanced levels of dioxins found in the milk from two farms in Derbyshire an expert scientific and medical team from my Department and the Department of Health was assembled to make the detailed calculations which were based on recommendations made in December 1990 by a WHO expert group.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will pay compensation to those who have had their livelihood adversely affected as a result of the dioxin levels in the milk supply in the Bolsover area.

Mr. Maclean: I have every sympathy with the two farmers whose milk can no longer go for human consumption and my staff are giving all the help they can. As for compensation, the established principle which applies in such circumstances is that it is the polluter who should pay.

DEFENCE

Racial Harassment

11. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints in respect of racial abuse or harassment have been made against military personnel in each of the past three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We do not maintain central records of all complaints of racial abuse or harassment. The MOD is aware, however, of four complaints in both 1988 and 1989, three in 1990 and one in 1991, so far.

Low Flying

12. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to appoint a liaison officer to deal with concerns and complaints from communities in the highlands and islands on the subject of low-flying military aircraft.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department plans to establish three RAF regional community relations officers in southern Scotland and the Borders, the Lake District and in Wales on a trial basis. If the scheme is successful, we will consider whether to extend it to other areas.

Territorial Army

13. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if advertising for volunteers to join the Territorial Army has been discontinued.

Mr. Tom King: No.

Scottish Units

14. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the record of recruitment and retention of service personnel in units based in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Recruitment in Scotland to all the services in 1989-90, the last full year for which data are available, was 11·6 per cent. of the United Kingdom total. The only relevant data on retention relate to the Scottish division, where the rate is marginally below that for the Army as a whole.

Rosyth

15. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has held with the local authorities concerned about the economic consequences of the closure of the Rosyth royal naval base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have received a number of representations from the local authorities. I met representatives of Fife regional council, Dunfermline district council and the trade unions earlier this year.

16. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to visit Rosyth naval dockyard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Defence Industry

17. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he has taken in his consideration of "Options for Change" of the continuing need for a British defence manufacturing capability.

Mr. Alan Clark: Industrial considerations are among the factors being taken into account.

Naval Bases

19. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the options he is considering concerning the future of the royal naval bases to allow full consultation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We will consult the trade unions in the usual way once we have proposals to make, but we are not yet in that position.

Trident

20. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Trident programme continues to progress to time and within budget towards its in-service date of the mid-1990s.

Kurdish Refugees

21. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the timetable for withdrawal of British troops from duties of protecting Kurdish refugees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes).

Soviet Forces (Nuclear Warheads)

22. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear warheads the Soviet armed forces have at their disposal.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet armed forces are estimated to have in excess of 25,000 nuclear warheads at their disposal.

Surplus Land

23. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review Ministry of Defence landholdings with a view to returning surplus land to community use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is this Government's policy that the defence estate should be no larger than necessary for defence purposes; we continually seek opportunities for rationalisation and the release of land surplus to our requirements. In order to ensure the best return is achieved for the taxpayer it is our normal practice to offer surplus land for sale on the open market.

Helicopters

24. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the extended use of military helicopters for civilian duties including use as air ambulances.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A number of representations have been received.

RAF Bentwaters and Woodbridge

25. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of RAF Bentwaters and RAF Woodbridge.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 17 May the United States Air Force announced its intention to withdraw from RAF Bentwaters and RAF Woodbridge by September 1993. The Ministry of Defence is examining options for the possible future use of the stations. No decisions have yet been taken.

The Gulf

26. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish an account of the operational record of the Royal Air Force in the Gulf conflict; and what information he has on what such reports are being published by other allied participating countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Air Chief Marshal Sir Patrick Hine's dispatch on Operation Granby was published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office as a supplement to the London Gazette on 29 June. I have no information on whether other coalition countries will be publishing official reports of their role in the conflict.

German Minister of Defence

27. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his German counterpart; and what aspects of future defence arrangements were discussed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met Dr. Stoltenberg at the Eurogroup conference held in Washington on 24 and 25 June, which considered various themes concerning the future of the NATO alliance under the headings: "New Security Challenges and the Future Role of the Alliance", "Future Force Structures and the Arms Control Process" and "NATO's Strategy: Political Guidance, Alliance Policy and Concepts".

Regiments

28. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which regiments will be disbanded under the Government's latest proposals.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 4 June, consultations are taking place within the Army on its future structure. It would not be appropriate to comment on the future of individual units while that process is under way.

Range Safety Certificates

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will publish the detailed criteria for the granting of range safety certificates for full-bore ranges in disused quarry sites;

(2) what changes there have been in the criteria for the assessment of range safety certificates in the last three years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The criteria against which range safety certificates for civilian ranges are issued are the same as those for MOD ranges. There are no plans to publish the criteria, which have not been changed in the last three years.

Search-and-Rescue Operations

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has completed his consideration of the contractorisation of search-and-rescue operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of the "Options for Change" review of the future size and shape of the armed forces, the Ministry of Defence is currently studying the provision of military SAR. A decision on the contractorisation of part of the military SAR task will be taken after this work has been completed.

Army Manpower

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the need for redeployment measures in the light of his recent announcement of a reduction in Army personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I assume that my hon. Friend's question relates to resettlement provision for those Army personnel who might be made redundant as a result of reductions in the strength of the Army. Those made redundant will have access to the same resettlement support as is provided to those leaving the services at the end of a normal engagement or commission. They will receive advice and counselling, and will also receive up to 28 days' training to equip them with new skills or assist them in transferring their existing skills to the civilian job market. In addition they will be able to obtain assistance with job finding from the Army Resettlement Employment Liaison Cell, or from the Officers Association or the Regular Forces Employment Association, both of which receive funding from the MOD.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the Statement on the Defence Estimates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: The Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991 will be published on 9 July.

Arab Industrial Organisation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions the British military attaché in Cairo has met the director of the Arab Industrial Organisation in Egypt this year.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our normal practice to discuss the duties of military personnel attached to our posts overseas.

Wyre Forest

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for the use of the facility at Drakelow lane in Wyre Forest; and what is the annual cost of maintaining this facility.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has no further use for its site at Drakelow, Wolverley and negotiations for its sale are currently in progress. No annual maintenance costs are being incurred; part of the site is let and producing rent.

Options for Change

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions have been taken on the implementation of "Options for Change" in the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have identified a number of measures needed to ensure the most effective use of the resources available for defence.

Subject to the usual consultation with the trade unions we have decided to close RAF Hullavington and No. 7 Flying Training School at RAF Church Fenton starting in April 1992, and RAF Abingdon by May 1993. The RAF elementary flying training school will be relocated from RAF Swinderby to RAF Topcliffe in July 1993. We have also decided that it should additionally be possible to close RAF West Raynham at some future date. No. 16 and No. 58 Squadrons, RAF Regiment, will be disbanded on 1 April 1992, and No. 63 Squadron RAF Regiment will be disbanded on 1 October 1992. These changes are part of the move towards smaller, better equipped, properly trained and housed and well-motivated armed forces announced by my right hon. Friend on 25 July 1990. Further announcements on the implementation of "Options for Change" in the RAF will be made as decisions are taken.

TRANSPORT

Drink Driving

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the proportion of (a) male drivers and (b) younger male drivers who were killed who were over the legal alcohol limit for each year since 1979.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is in the table.

Fatally injured male drivers and riders: estimated percentage over legal blood alcohol limit by age: Great Britain: 1979 to 1989

	Aged up to 21	All ages
1979	32	32
1980	29	32
1981	23	30
1982	28	34
1983	24	28
1984	27	27
1985	21	25
1986	26	25
1987	22	27
1988	21	22
1989	17	20

Motorways

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which methods of assessing the extent of mitigation of the M40's environmental impact (a) have and (b) have not, been applied to the M11 link road; and for those in (a) what relative values have been applied.

Mr. Chope: The environmental impact of the M40 extension, which runs for 59 miles through largely agricultural land, cannot be directly compared with an urban scheme such as the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 link road. The Department's methodology for environmental appraisal is applied to all road proposals, but the measures required to mitigate the adverse effects are dependent on the individual nature of each project. In the case of the M11 link road, a significant amount of the cost of the scheme is for measures to mitigate the adverse effects of the road including the construction of three sections of tunnel.

Ministerial Correspondence

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons Ministers in his Department have not complied with the prime ministerial guideline that all Ministers should accompany their replies to Members' letters with a copy of that reply.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is, and always has been, the practice of the ministerial correspondence unit in the Department of Transport, to enclose a copy of letters from Ministers to Members, along with the original—and any enclosures, for example, press notices—of any replies dealing with constituents' correspondence.

If, however, a subject has been raised by a Member, and no specific constituent is involved, only the original of the reply is sent.

The ministerial correspondence unit is particularly aware of the importance of enclosing a copy of replies involving constituents during recesses, when Members are dealing with correspondence from their homes.

Airline Employees

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps were taken to secure the terms and conditions of employment of the TWA. United Kingdom-based employees being transferred to American Airlines as a result of his decision to allow American Airlines to take over the TWA Heathrow routes;

(2) if he will make it his policy, when he agrees to the transfer of airline routes from one foreign airline to another, to take steps to ensure the protection of employment terms and conditions of United Kingdom employees concerned.

Mr. McLoughlin: These arrangements are matters for the companies concerned and their employees, subject to any relevant rules regarding employment protection and transfer. They are not matters in which I intervene and I have no plans to change my policy in this respect.

Shipping

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current level of investment by British shipowners in new capacity and the tonnage to be built.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1989, United Kingdom shipowners placed orders for 29 new vessels and took delivery of a further 34 second-hand vessels at an estimated total cost of £462 million. Comparable figures for 1990 are in preparation. I will write to the hon. Member with this information as soon as it becomes available.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has a strong and continuing policy commitment to improve transport facilities for disabled people.

A summary of recent developments and current priorities is contained in the annual report for 1990 from my Department's disability unit, a copy of which is in the library.

Severn Bridge (Gantry Accident)

Mr. Grist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is able to announce the outcome of the investigations he commissioned into the accident to a maintenance gantry on the Severn bridge on 4 September 1990.

Mr. Chope: I am publishing the report of the investigations today and am placing a copy in the Library. I accept the broad thrust of all the recommendations in the report. As the report itself recognises, further work will be necessary before deciding exactly how certain of the recommendations are to be pursued; this work is already under way.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table to show the amounts of (a) hazardous and (b) toxic wastes imported into Great Britain from (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) the Irish Republic in each of the past five years for incineration.

Mr. Baldry: Information on the importation of waste into Great Britain has been available only since the introduction of the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations in October 1988. No distinction is made in the regulations between hazardous and toxic waste.

From 1 October 1988 to 31 March 1989, a total of 29·4 tonnes of hazardous waste for incineration were imported through English ports from the Irish Republic. The equivalent figure for 1989-90 is 89·1 tonnes. Final figures for 1990-91 are not yet available.

The provision of information for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively. Information on trade within the United Kingdom is not held centrally.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the quantity of toxic and hazardous wastes arising from the operations of the Du Pont company in Northern Ireland which is transferred to the incinerators of the Cleanaway and Raychem plants in Great Britain each year.

Mr. Trippier: None. Monitoring the movement of hazardous waste within the United Kingdom is the responsibility of local waste disposal authorities.

Housing Grant

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will produce a table showing (a) the level of grant made by the Housing Corporation to housing associations within each one of the five West Yorkshire local authorities in each of the past five years, (b) the housing needs index for each authority in each year, (c) the excess or shortfall of grant over or below housing needs index for each authority in each year and (d) the total excess or shortfall for each authority over the five-year period; and if he will outline the criteria used by the Housing Corporation which would cause the grant made to housing associations within each local authority being either above or below that authority's housing needs index.

Mr. Yeo: The distribution of resources among local authority areas is a matter for the Housing Corporation. I have, therefore, asked the corporation to reply direct to my hon. Friend with the information he has requested. A copy of the reply will be placed in the Libraries of the House. It should be noted, however, that although the housing needs indicator is the best means available for allocating resources to Housing Corporation regions, for statistical reasons it is less reliable at local level. In determining priorities within the regions, therefore, the corporation's regional offices also use their own assessment of need, informed by discussions with local authorities in their enabling role.

Ministerial Conference, Czechoslovakia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representation the United Kingdom had at the ministerial conference for environment in Europe held in Drobis, Czechoslovakia on 22-23 June; and what decisions were taken at the conference.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 1 July 1991]: I attended the "Environment for Europe" ministerial conference held in Drobis last week where we discussed ways for further strengthening co-operation to protect and improve the environment, long-term strategies towards a European protection and restoration system and an environmental programme for Europe. The conclusions of the conference have been made available in the Library.

Valuation Rules

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the guidance which has been issued to valuation officers on the interpretation of Statutory Instrument 474/91; and whether this guidance makes reference to the presence of en suite bathrooms or of tea-making facilities as relevant to assessing whether a householder is excluded from the business rate concession.

Mr. Maples: I have been asked to reply.

It is not our practice to disclose instructions which are issued for the confidential guidance of staff, but when deciding whether a household is to be excluded from non-domestic rating valuation officers will have regard to all the facilities provided and the intensity of business use. No particular facility will be considered in isolation, but only in relation to all the circumstances of the case.

DEFENCE

Mr. William Douglas-Home

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) of 17 June, Official Report, column 65, if he will publish the decision reached in the review of the case of the hon. William Douglas-Home, and the reasons for it.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. This is a private matter between the Ministry of Defence and the hon. William Douglas-Home.

Anti-personnel Minefields

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries where United Kingdom forces are helping to discover and disarm anti-personnel minefields.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Engineers are currently deployed in Colombia, the Falkland islands and Kuwait. In Colombia they are providing bomb search and disposal training as part of the Government's package of anti-drugs assistance. In the Falkland islands the explosive ordnance disposal detachment of the garrison field squadron is responsible for monitoring the minefields left behind by the Argentine invasion forces in 1982. In Kuwait, in the aftermath of hostilities, Royal Engineers co-ordinated the multinational effort of marking Iraqi-laid minefields. The current activities of the Royal Engineers in Kuwait do not include specific tasking on the search for and disarming of anti-personnel mines, but concentrate on the disposal of unexploded ordnance.

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the future of Ministry of Defence police currently involved in policing of Royal Ordnance plc sites at Chorley, Radway Green, Nottingham, Bridgewater and Glascoed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The number of Ministry of Defence police officers to be based at each factory remains the subject of negotiations between the Ministry of Defence and Royal Ordnance plc.

Operation Granby

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of service personnel being treated for anxiety disorders or other psychiatric problems resulting either wholly or partially from Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Seventy-nine service personnel are at present receiving treatment within service facilities for anxiety disorders or other psychiatric problems resulting wholly or partially from Operation Granby.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have had some form of treatment for anxiety disorders or other psychiatric problems resulting either wholly or partially from Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the treatment of (a) service personnel suffering from anxiety disorders or other psychiatric problems resulting either wholly or partially from Operation Granby and (b) their families.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The services aim to identify and treat service personnel and their families suffering from anxiety disorders or other psychiatric problems at the earliest possible time. Service personnel would be treated within their community at service facilities and their dependents would be treated in both service and NHS facilities according to location.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions have been issued to unit commanders involved in Operation Granby regarding service personnel suffering from anxiety disorders or other psychiatric problems resulting either wholly or partially from Operation Granby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The policy for the early identification and treatment of anxiety disorders and other psychiatric problems is well established within the services. Personnel at all levels have been briefed on the need for continued support in the aftermath of Operation Granby.

Dartmoor National Park

Mr. Hannam To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons the licence agreement for military training in the Dartmoor national park has been renewed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The use of Dartmoor will remain crucial for effective military training, as it is the only primary training area in the south-west of England. The requirement for Duchy of Cornwall land on Dartmoor for military training purposes therefore continues to be in the national interest.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Records

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many accesses were made to each index of the police national computer over the past year; and whether he will include in these statistics an indication of the number of access requests that could search more than one index.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Royal Ulster Constabulary does not have direct access to the police national computer but can indirectly obtain information from the computer by arrangement with police forces in Great Britain. Statistics are not maintained by the RUC on the number of inquiries made each year, but I understand from the chief constable that useage of this facility is infrequent.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about next steps agencies in his Department.

Mr. Brooke: I am pleased to announce three new candidates for executive agency status. These are:

The vehicle inspection and driving test centres in the Department of the Environment;

The child support agency in the Department of Health and Social Services; and Criminal compensation in the Northern Ireland Office.

Further details on the timing of the launch of these agencies will be announced in due course.

Railways

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what conclusions he has reached on the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on railway services provided by Northern Ireland Railways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have placed today in the Library of the House the initial response produced by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, in consultation with the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company and Northern Ireland Railways, to the report submitted by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in December 1990.

I am grateful to the commission for the comprehensive review it carried out. While commending NIR's management for its dedication and resilience in maintaining services despite terrorist disruption and confirming that the company did not operate against the public interest, the commission found that there was scope for improving efficiency and reducing costs. The commission identified the principal challenges facing the company as the need to modernise a railway heavily dependent on subsidy, the rationalisation of its complex pay system, sharp competition from bus and car, and the effect of terrorist disruption on the passenger base.

The report made 34 recommendations and all have been accepted. Some are already being implemented. Others require further consideration about the manner of implementation. The outcome should be a significant improvement of services to the public and the management of the company.

The Department continues to be in dialogue with the Transport holding company and Northern Ireland Railways about the implementation of the recommendations and I shall report on progress to the House in due course.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The information until 31 December 1991 is as follows:

Crime Prevention Public Awareness Campaign—multi media
Environmental Awareness and Energy Efficiency—multi media
Job Training Programme—multi media
Pedestrian Safety—television

WALES

Conwy Tunnel

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what arrangements were made in his Department for the financial and technical screening of sub-contractors working on the Conwy tunnel;

(2) how many sub-contractors have been used on the construction of the Conwy tunnel; and how many of these have gone into liquidation.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In selecting main contractors invited to tender for all motorway and trunk road projects, the Department satisfied itself on the financial and technical ability of the chosen companies. In accordance with the Department's standard conditions of contract, the main contractor is fully responsible for the acts, defaults and neglects of any sub-contractor, his agents, servants or workmen. As such, the Department is not required to screen sub-contractors. Similarly the Department would not need to be made aware of any sub-contractor who may have gone into liquidation. The Conwy tunnel project has been subject to these normal procedures. The number of sub-contractors used to date on the project is in excess of 60.

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the efficiency of the construction of the Conwy tunnel compared with that of similar projects elsewhere.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In selecting main contractors invited to tender for all motorway and trunk road projects, the Department satisfies itself on the financial and technical capability of such contractors. In accordance with the Department's standard conditions of contracts, contractors have an obligation to meet the requirements of the contract both in terms of timescale and standard. The Department appoints agents or consultant engineers for each project to watch and supervise the construction of the works. The Conwy tunnel project is subject to these normal procedures.

NHS Administrators

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to cut back the number of NHS administrators in Wales to 1979 levels.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Responsibility for the number of administrative staff employed in the NHS in Wales is a matter for the appropriate health authority. The NHS reforms will deliver a better-managed and more responsive service in which resources follow patients and manpower requirements reflect local service needs. Provision of health care is now governed by district contracts in which quality and costs are continually scrutinised. In the year to March 1990—the latest period for which figures are available—management, administrative and clerical staff costs accounted for approximately 10·2 per cent. of the salary budget for district health authorities, including the Welsh Health Common Services Authority as opposed to 12·2 per cent. in the year to March 1979.

Sport in Schools

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average number of hours allocated to compulsory sport in Wales generally and in each local education authority area for secondary schools in each year between 1979 and 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Sport is not a compulsory activity in maintained schools. Physical education, which includes such sporting activities as team games, swimming and athletics, has been included as a national curriculum subject in schools for pupils aged five to 14 since autumn 1990 under the provisions of the Education Reform Act 1988. It will shortly become a national curriculum subject for pupils aged 14 to 16.

Information is not maintained centrally on time spent in secondary schools on sporting activities as part of PE.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the average amount of playing area in hectares and acres in (a) primary schools in Wales, (b) secondary schools in Wales and (c) all schools; and what was the equivalent figure in 1976, 1979 and 1984;

(2) what percentage of Welsh schools have (a) a swimming pool, (b) a sports hall and (c) a gymnasium; and what were the equivalent percentages in 1979, 1984 and 1989.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Wales; and how many primary and secondary schools have (i) no designated playing fields or (ii) no designated playgrounds.

Sir Wyn Roberts: On 1 January 1991 there were 1,717 primary and 230 secondary schools in Wales. The Education (Schools Premises) Regulations 1981 lay down minimum standards for the provision of recreation areas and playing fields in schools. Local education authorities are responsible for applying those standards, and information on these matters is not collected centrally.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of livestock carcases dumped on (a) council refuse tips, (b) road side verges, (c) forests and woodlands and (d) rivers and lakes in Wales in each year from 1985 to 1990.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to set up a network of disposal centres for dead livestock in Wales; and how much has been spent by his Department during each of the past five years on developing incinerators and digesters for dead livestock in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: It is essentially the responsibility of the livestock sector to find ways of handling its waste within the framework of environmental and health restrictions. Under the farm and conservation grant scheme, on-farm grants are available to assist with waste disposal, and for on-farm anaerobic digesters for animal waste, including carcase waste. Grant aid for incinerators or disposal pits could be made only at the expense of the areas already covered.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many specific places on employment training the Government plan should be made available for adults with learning difficulties in 1992 in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Regulations

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he was consulted by the Building Regulations Advisory Committee on its new proposals regarding fire regulations;

(2) what response he will make to the new proposals on fire regulations in the Building Regulations Advisory Committee report published on 26 June.

Mr. John Patten: The Building Regulations Advisory Committee (BRAC) advises the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales on matters concerning the building regulations. My understanding is that the committee held a meeting on 26 June, but its proceedings are confidential and no public report or statement has been made about the outcome of that meeting. There is no reason for the committee to consult Ministers or for Ministers to respond publicly to its reports. The Home Office has an observer on the committee and is represented on the committee's fire advisory panel and its stage 2 review committee which have been advising the committee on the fire safety aspects of its proposals. In addition, Home Office officials are in regular contact with officials of the Department of the Environment to ensure that there is no disagreement on the fire safety aspects of any proposed changes to the regulations.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from chief fire officers with regard to the Building Regulations Advisory Committee proposals to change fire regulations for buildings in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No such representations have been received, but I understand that chief fire officers have made their views known to the Department of the Environment both in a written submission from the Chief and Assistant Chief Fire Officers Association in response to the public consultation document which was issued by the Department in March 1990 and orally at a meeting.

Prisoners (Drug Dosage)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons information on the number of doses of drugs administered to inmates of penal establishments became unavailable between the answers to the hon. Member for Warrington, South on 20 January 1988, Official Report, columns 706-8 and on 26 June, Official Report, column 475.

Mrs. Rumbold: Statistics relating to the number of doses of medicines administered to prisoners in all establishments in England and Wales were last published in the Report on the Work of the Prison Department 1985/86 (Cm. 11) They were partly estimated because some prisons were unable to furnish the required information. Since corresponding information for 1986-87 was given to my hon. Friend in 1988 in respect of certain establishments an increasing number of prison pharmacies have failed to provide local statistics owing to staffing difficulties.

A further factor has been the increasing diversity in prison medicine regimes. This development has led us to reassess the value of the statistics for management purposes and to accept the view expressed by the Social Services Committee in 1986—third report from the Social Services Committee, Session 1985-86: "Prison Medical Service"—that their publication serves no useful purpose.

In the light of these factors central collection of these statistics has been discontinued.

Racist Incidents

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racially motivated incidents were reported to each police force in England and Wales in 1988, 1989 and 1990; what was the nature of the incidents reported; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The publication of the number of racial incidents reported to forces is a matter for chief officers. Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary collects forces' figures centrally—the totals for 1988, 1989 and 1990, including figures from the Metropolitan police, are as follows:

	Number
1988	4,383
1990	6,359

The nature of these incidents varies greatly and is not centrally recorded. Their common factor is that, in each case, a racial motivation was perceived by the victim, the investigating officer or a third party. The outcome of each reported incident is a matter for chief officers, but Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary monitors as a priority the response of forces to Home Office guidance on tackling racial attacks and harassment.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire about attacks on Muslim graves in Bradford and Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have every confidence that the force is responding to these attacks promptly and effectively. I understand that attacks in Bradford in May led to several arrests, and that two people are on bail pending charges. An attack in Leeds last week is under investigation. The police have kept in close contact with leaders of the Muslim community throughout.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial attacks were reported to the police during 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [pursuant to his reply, 20 May 1991, c. 346]: Six thousand three hundred and fifty-nine racially motivated incidents were reported to police forces in England and Wales during 1990.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department does not have the major responsibility for any of the matters on which the manifesto makes recommendations. But we shall continue to work towards enabling people with disabilities, including, where applicable, our own staff, to maximise their potential and to contribute fully to all aspects of the life of the community.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table to show for each magistrates court area, for the year ended 31 March 1990, the number of (a) summonses for domestic rates arrears, (b) defendants present, (c) defendants not present, (d) committals and (e) hours each court sat.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available from central records, and to the extent that it could be obtained at all could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Custody Time Limits

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the further extension of custody time limits.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I intend to lay regulations which will, with effect from 1 October, extend custody time limits in London, Bedfordshire, Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Essex, Hertfordshire, Oxfordshire, Surrey and Sussex. In Birmingham, the time limit to committal will be reduced from 84 to 70 days.

Sunday Trading

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now advise local authorities how they can enforce the law on Sunday trading.

Mrs. Rumbold [holding answer 2 July 1991]: As I indicated in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 17 June at columns 27-28, we do not consider it either appropriate or necessary to issue guidance about the enforcement of the law on Sunday trading to local authorities; and no development since then causes us to alter that judgment. Responsibility for enforcing the provisions about Sunday trading in the Shops Act 1950 was given by Parliament to local authorities. The authorities have power to enforce those provisions whether by way of a prosecution or a civil action seeking an injunction. Decisions on the means by which to fulfil their responsibility are a matter for the authorities, in consultation with their legal advisers.

Sexual and Physical Violence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what practical assistance is offered by Her Majesty's Government to women victims of sexual and physical abuse in relation to the provision of refuges;

(2) what plans he has to extend financial support beyond the National Women's Aid Federation to other groups that are affiliated to this federation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

Practical assistance and funding for individual refuges are local matters, and there are no plans to change this. However, many residents in women's refuges are entitled to and receive social security benefits, and individual refuges receive practical advice and support from the Women's Aid Federation (England) Ltd. which is grant-aided by the Department.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Ex-service Men and Women

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consideration he has given to introducing a more comprehensive system of support with his Department to deal with problems faced by ex-service men and women.

Miss Widdecombe: The social security system treats ex-service men and women in the same way as other customers. In addition, under the war pensions scheme administered by the Department, war pensions and allowances are payable where disablement or death occurs as a result of service in the armed forces; the war pensioners welfare service also provides advice to war pensioners and war widows on war pension matters and help and support with general welfare problems. The war pensions welfare service works closely with other Government Departments and agencies, including war pension committees and voluntary organisations representing ex-service men and women.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are in place for notifying the terminally ill of successful applications for attendance allowance; if he has any plans to review these; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: People awarded attendance allowance under the terminal illness provisions are notified that they qualify under the special rules. The special rules are not defined in the award notice. The standard leaflet—DS 668—issued with the notice explains the conditions for the allowance and the rules for review and appeal, and gives information on other benefits and help available. It also describes the terminal illness criteria, but does not link them to the special rules.

The arrangements for the terminal illness provisions are kept continually under review. We have no specific plans to amend the arrangements for the notification of awards.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Our strategy on benefits for people with disabilities, was set out in "The Way Ahead"—Cm 917. The strategy provides a more comprehensive and coherent system of benefits for people with disabilities than ever before, laying firm foundations for the future. The changes set out in "The Way Ahead" concentrate new help where it is needed most—on people with moderate to severe disabilities who just fail to qualify for attendance allowance or mobility allowance, on those disabled from birth or in their early years who have lost the opportunity to earn and save, and on those who would like to work but are prevented by disincentives in the benefit system.

The cornerstone of the strategy is the introduction of two new benefits. Disability living allowance for people disabled under age 65, replaces and extends the help currently available through attendance allowance and mobility allowance, bringing new help with extra costs to nearly 300,000 disabled people. Disability working allowance will offer around 50,000 disabled people who are capable of some work a new choice of earnings topped up by benefit. These two new benefits plus other important initiatives announced in "The Way Ahead" will bring extra help to an estimated 850,000 disabled people and their carers.

Direct Payment of Benefits

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply of 7 December, Official Report, column 232, regarding payment to claimants' bank accounts, if he has now issued the guidance; and if he will send a copy to the hon. Member for Oldham, West.

Miss Widdecombe: The issue of guidance to local offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the benefits agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pensions Ombudsman

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the first report of the pensions ombudsman.

Mr. Newton: The pensions ombudsman, Mr. Michael Platt, has submitted to me his first report in accordance with section 59B(6) of the Social Security Pensions Act 1975. The report covers the period from Mr. Platt's appointment on 2 January 1991 to 31 March 1991, and describes the setting up of his offices and other aspects of the establishment of the service. I have today arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library.

ENERGY

Piper Alpha Inquiry

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has received Lord Cullen's direction under regulation 9(2) of the Offshore Installations (Public Inquiries) Regulations 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Lord Cullen's direction was received by my Department on 12 June 1991. He directed that four fifths of the costs of part 1 of the Piper Alpha inquiry shall be paid by Occidental Petroleum (Caledonia) Ltd. A copy of Lord Cullen's direction and notes have been placed in the Library of the House.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Violence Against Women

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to include education on violence against women in the national curriculum.

Mr. Fallon: The National Curriculum Council's guidance to schools on health and citizenship education contains advice relevant to such education across the whole curriculum.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to encourage education on violence against women in courses studied in institutions of higher and further education.

Mr. Eggar: It is for the academic authorities in each institution to decide on the content of the education provision made by the institution, subject to the requirements of any validating body.

Women Teachers

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the proportion of women among primary school teachers was for the years 1979, 1985 and 1990.

Mr. Fallon: Figures for women teachers as a percentage of qualified teachers in maintained nursery and primary schools in England for the years requested are as follows:

Year	Percent
1979	78
1985	79
1990	82

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend will give careful consideration to the education recommendations in the manifesto. His general view is that the position of pupils with special educational needs is adequately protected by the Education Act 1981 which requires that wherever possible such children should be taught in ordinary schools. The Department is not aware of any widespread failure by LEAs to meet their various obligations under the Act.

Veterinary Schools

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) of 5 February, Official Report, column 131, what information he has on the capital and current funds allocated by the Universities Funding Council for 1991-92 for the upgrading of animal accommodation in veterinary schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The UFC circular letter 7/91 of 25 February, a copy of which is in the Library, indicated that the council intends to contribute nearly £70 million over three years for building works and equipment to assist universities in meeting the requirements of the code of practice under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. In 1991-92, £35 million is being assigned, of which some £10 million is from capital grant.

Braille

Mr. Batterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what budget his Department has for the production of materials in braille.

Mr. Eggar: The Department has no budget for the production of materials in braille. The GCSE examining groups and the GCE A and AS-level examining boards cover the cost of brailling examination papers by making a small addition to the examination entry fees of all candidates. In the case of candidates from maintained schools, those fees are met by the local education authorities.

EMPLOYMENT

Working Hours

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish his Department's working papers in support of the figure claimed for the cost of the EC directive on working hours.

Mr. Forth: A memorandum prepared by my Department on the costs of the social action programme to the United Kingdom and the methods used to derive these cost estimates has already been published in the report by the House of Lords Select Committee on European Communities on "Part time and temporary employment" —Session 1990-91, 2nd report, pp 33-45.

The European Commission has meanwhile published a revised version of the draft working time directive taking account of amendments proposed by the European Parliament. Using the same method as in the original calculation, my Department estimates that the direct costs to employers of implementing the directive as amended would be increased by over £500 million to at least £2·5 billion.

Occupational Health Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify the International Labour Organisation convention 161 on occupational health nurses.

Mr. Forth: The Government expect to receive advice from the Health and Safety Commission next year on ILO convention 161, in the light of which they will give further consideration to whether to ratify the convention in question.

Enterprise Agencies

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many enterprise agencies there are; how many there were in 1989; what was the cost to the public funds in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I know of 421 local enterprise agencies operating in the United Kingdom. Of these, 408 are approved by my Department under the statutory provisions which allow for tax relief on donations to them. In 1989, the total number of approved agencies was 396.

Government funding of local enterprise agencies in England has been primarily through my Department's local enterprise agency grant and project schemes—LEAGS and LEAPS. During 1989-90 total funding under LEAGS and LEAPS was £1,879, 562 and during 1990-91, the final year of the schemes, it was £1,932,714.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Department is committed to giving people with disabilities the opportunity to participate fully in training and employment. We therefore provide a wide range of specialist schemes and services to help them gain and keep employment and develop within it. People with disabilities also have access to the full range of non-specialist employment and training services, which will include the new work experience programme that my right hon. and learned Friend announced recently, employment action. In many cases access to non-specialist provision allows for reduced eligibility or length of stay rules and special help for people with disabilities.

We are already giving careful consideration to ways of improving the effectiveness of this provision for people with disabilities. Last year the Department issued two consultative documents that considered all the employment and training services we provide for people with disabilities and put forward many proposals for improvement. We received responses from a wide range of organisations and individuals, including almost all of the organisations that produced the disability manifesto. Responses are still being considered on some issues, but we have announced our first decisions. These concerned improvements in the specialist services provided by the Employment Service and in our local and national advisory machinery. We will announce other decisions as soon as they are reached, including any changes to the legislative framework.

My right hon. and learned Friend also launched the new symbol that is currently being successfully promoted by the Employment Service to encourage and help employers to commit themselves publicly on a voluntary basis to good policies and practices in employing people with disabilities.

In addition, from April this year we have given unemployed people with disabilities priority access to four of our main employment and training programmes. They are now one of the key groups for entry onto employment training, the enterprise allowance scheme, job clubs and the job interview guarantee scheme. Training and enterprise councils and the Employment Service will ensure that people with disabilities who are unemployed will be given this priority recognition. My right hon. and learned Friend has written to TEC chairmen about this priority and special guidance has been issued about people with special training needs, including people with disabilities, so as to help TECs plan and implement their strategies for taking action. The increased priority will help strengthen the opportunity for people with disabilities to participate in the labour market.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many specific places on employment training he plans to make available for adults with learning difficulties in 1992.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available, but I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to his question on 2 July, at column 108.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Investment (Information)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Government statistics on investment in United Kingdom industry differentiate between domestic investment and investment into the United Kingdom from other countries.

Mr. Maples: The annual census of production provides data on capital expenditure by manufacturing businesses located in the United Kingdom analysed by the country of incorporation of the enterprise. These data are published in Central Statistical Office Business Monitor PA 1002, available in the Library.

No information is however available on the country from which such expenditure is financed. Data on direct investment capital flows are published in CSO bulletin 33/91 also available in the Library. It should be noted that these relate to international flows between related companies and not to investment in capital goods.

"This Common Inheritance"

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 March, Official Report, columns 648-49, on his Department's environmental policies, if he will list the policies which have been subject to the arrangements for considering environmental implications since the publication of "This Common Inheritance", Cm. 1200.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As I explained in my reply on 1 March at columns 648-49, I consider all departmental policies with possible environmental implications. For example, I considered the environmental effects of the changes in the tax system announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement, in particular the further increase in the differential in between rates of excise duty charged on leaded and unleaded petrol and the increased rates of excise duties on hydrocarbon oils. My predecessor also reviewed the regulations governing the civil service mileage allowances.

I have also kept under review the implications for Treasury policies of international discussions on climate change.

Commemorative Crown

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to issue a new United Kingdom commemorative crown.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to approve my recommendation that a new commemorative crown be issued in 1993 to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the coronation.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy toward the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Treasury has an equal opportunity policy discussed with the departmental trade union side, kept under continuous review and published in a guide issued to staff. One of the guiding principles is that disability is no bar to recruitment or to advancement within the Department. Additional computer and office furniture have been provided to assist disabled staff. Where possible parking spaces are made available. All Treasury offices have wheelchair access.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Asia (Refugees)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he plans to provide for refugees in Asia.

Mrs. Chalker: I have approved an allocation of £8 million from this year's humanitarian aid budget, more than £6 million of which will be provided to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the International Committee of the Red Cross and to non-governmental organisations for their work with Afghan refugees. This is in recognition of the very serious continuing problems of the 5 million or so Afghans living in exile in Pakistan and Iran.

Assistance will also be made available for the work of UNHCR in Sri Lanka, the UN Border Relief Organisation (UNBRO) and NGOs working on the Thai-Cambodia border and with Vietnamese boat people.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications

19. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the level of activity in the telecommunications industry since 1986.

Mr. Lilley: Telecommunications is one of the most dynamic industries in the United Kingdom. Over the past five years the market has grown rapidly, stimulated by the Government's commitment to competition and increased customer choice. In mobile telephony we have the two largest cellular networks in the world, with 10 times as many customers as in 1986. In March my right hon. Friend announced that we would be ending the duopoly in the fixed telephony market, and allowing new companies to enter the market. We have already received five formal applications for new licences and over 20 strong expressions of interest. This is good for the industry, and good for consumers.

Manufacturing Output

20. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further plans he has to encourage an increase in manufacturing output.

26. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to boost manufacturing output.

Mr. Lilley: Manufacturing output will be helped by our policies of fostering and extending a competitive environment, encouraging innovation, improving incentives and, above all, defeating inflation.

Industrial Competitiveness

21. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has to increase public expenditure in order to help British industry become more competitive.

Mr. Sainsbury: A competitive market provides the best stimulus to efficiency. Government policies are designed to encourage competition.

Takeovers

23. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of companies acquired by other companies within the United Kingdom in each year from 1979 to 1990.

Mr. Redwood: The information that is available is as follows.

Acquisitions and mergers by industrial and commercial companies within the United Kingdom:

Year	Companies acquired
1979	534
1980	469
1981	452
1982	463
1983	447
1984	568
1985	474
1986	842
1987	1,528
1988	1,499
1989	1,337
1990	776

Source: Central Statistical Office Bulletin 29/91 dated 14 May 1991.

Exporters

24. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the various measures for the assistance of United Kingdom exporters which are currently available to them.

Mr. Sainsbury: The effectiveness of the range of export services available to United Kingdom companies through the DTI-FCO overseas trade services operation is monitored through a quality management system. Overall satisfaction rates exceed 70 per cent. for nearly all services, and 90 per cent. of our customers say that they will use our services again.

Aid to Industry

25. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of the European Commission to discuss aid to industry.

Mr. Leigh: My Department and I meet representatives of the European Commission on a regular basis to discuss various matters including aid to industry.

Japanese Investment

27. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the current level of inward investment from Japan.

Mr. Leigh: Latest figures from the Central Statistical Office show that Japanese investment represents 4·1 per cent. of total foreign direct investment in the United Kingdom. The DTI knows of 158 Japanese companies manufacturing in the United Kingdom. According to Japanese Ministry of Finance statistics, 41 per cent. by value of all Japanese, manufacturing and non-manufacturing, investment in the EC at end of financial year 1990-91, came to the United Kingdom.

Nationalisation

28. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations requesting him to consider nationalising certain industries.

Mr. Lilley: I have received a copy of the Labour party's document, "Meet the Challenge, Make the Change", which calls for a programme of nationalisation including British Telecom, the water industry and the national grid.

Information Technology

29. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the United Kingdom's current balance of trade in information technology.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on trade in electronics and information technology products—defined as divisions 75 and 76 of the standard international trade classification —may be obtained from the monthly business monitor MM20 (Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom) copies of which are in the Library.

Shipbuilding and Marine Engines

30. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the shipbuilding and marine engine building industries in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh: The futures of the United Kingdom's shipbuilding and marine engine building industries will depend on their respective abilities to win orders in the face of international competition.

Regional Assistance

31. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals he has for increasing the percentage levels of regional assistance available in development areas.

Mr. Leigh: None.

Recession

32. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the British Chamber of Commerce to discuss the recession of industry.

Mr. Lilley: Officials of my Department keep in touch with the Association of British Chambers of Commerce on a wide range of business matters. I last met representatives of the ABCC on 5 June 1991.

Language Schools

33. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the change in turnover of language schools in London for each of the past three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Leigh: No such information is available.

Accountancy Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry further to his reply to the hon. Member forr Great Grimsby on 23 May, Official Report, column 627, (1) if he will publish a list showing the dates on which the Institute of Chartered Accountants or the joint disciplinary scheme informed him of the result of their inquiries;

(2) if he will list the dates on which the reports were given to the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

Mr. Redwood: The information requested is as follows:

	Name of Company	Report sent	Decision notified
1	Milbury plc Westminster Property Group Limited	26 October 1988	—
2	Minet Holdings plc WMD Underwriting Agencies Limited	13 August 1990	—
3	Alexander Howden Holdings plc	13 August 1990	—
4	The Greenbank Trust plc	19 June 1990	11 June 1991
5	Aldermanbury Trust plc	31 January 1991	—
6	Sound Diffusion plc	15 March 1991	—
7	The Animal Defence Society Limited	14 March 1991	—

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to propose legislation under which partners from the auditing firms implicated in money laundering will be barred for life from practising.

Mr. Redwood: Under part II of the Companies Act 1989 the recognised supervisory bodies must ensure that only fit and proper persons are eligible for appointment as company auditors. Paragraph 6(2)(c) of schedule 11 to the Act makes relevant provision in respect of partnerships.

Manufacturers (Exports)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his policies of support and encouragement for the exporting of United Kingdom manufactures.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office provide, through oveseas trade services, a wide range of help, advice and support to exporters at each stage of the export process, from researching opportunities through to contacting and visiting markets. These services are described in "Export Inititive—a pocket guide" a copy of which is in the Library. Some 2,000 staff in the two Departments are engaged, worldwide, in helping exporters.

The services we offer are available to those exporting both goods and services. In particular, we aim to help small and inexperienced exporters who, without Government encouragement, might never consider selling overseas; experienced exporters who are new to a particular market; and those pursuing project business, where Government influence is often not only helpful but vital when contracts are to be clinched.

Together with the FCO we have instituted regular independent monitoring of our services and the way in which they are delivered. The feedback received from industry shows overall satisfaction rates among our business customers exceeding 70 per cent. for nearly all services, and 90 per cent. of those monitored say they would use our services again.

It is encouraging to note the steady rise in the level of exports of manufactured goods in recent months. The efforts of those concerned are to be applauded.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: New technologies have improved the opportunities for participation of people with disabilities in the life of the community. This Department contributed as part of the information technology awareness campaign to a better understanding of possible applications of information technology and telecommunications products and services to benefit the disabled. Current policies and programmes to stimulate innovation in industry will lead to further developments, not only important to national economic growth but, in some cases, of particular value in the lives of those with disabilities.

Post Office

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will place in the Library copies of the report he commissioned on the Post Office by the consultants Ernst and Young.

Mr. Leigh: No, since I have commissioned no reports on the Post Office from the consultants Ernst and Young.

CBI

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the condition of industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: Ministers and officials of my Department keep in touch with the CBI on a wide range of business matters. I last met representatives of the CBI on 14 June 1991.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep Dipping

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure the continuation of the compulsory national sheep dipping scheme for the foreseeable future;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that sheep scab remains a notifiable disease and that dipping be imposed on flocks in which scab is confirmed and on contiguous flocks.

Mr. Maclean: The future of compulsory dipping will depend on an assessment of the effectiveness of the existing arrangements, including the degree of commitment to them shown by the sheep industry. Changes in the arrangements for dealing with infected flocks were announced last year and will be implemented shortly.

Birds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take to reduce the number of sea birds drowned in monofilament nets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: A number of regulations and byelaws are concerned with the use of fishing nets. There is little evidence to suggest that these nets are threatening the survival of any species in our waters.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the number of wild-caught birds which were imported into the United Kingdom in 1987, 1988 and 1989 and indicate, for each year, the estimated proportion which died (a) in transit, (b) during the first 15 days of quarantine and (c) during the last 20 days of quarantine.

Mr. Maclean: The totals of captive birds imported into Great Britain, together with totals of mortalities on arrival and during quarantine are set out below. The figures do not distinguish wild-caught from captive-bred but most of the birds are considered to have been wild-caught. Information about the proportion of birds dying during particular periods of quarantine could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

1987	163,699	3,480	(2·13)	13,521	(8·26)
1988	184,577	4,732	(2·56)	20,619	(11·17)
1989	184,601	4,015	(2·17)	19,471	(10·55)

Source: Return of Proceedings under the Animal Health Act 1981 for the year 1987; Importation of Birds Mortality Statistics from Quarantine Returns for the years 1988 and 1989. The figures exclude importations of performing doves, racing pigeons and exotic poultry.

Blue Ear Pig Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of restrictions imposed on premises with suspected or confirmed cases of blue ear disease in the past 24 hours; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: No new suspected or confirmed cases of blue ear pig disease were reported within the 24 hours at 3.30 pm on 3 July 1991.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place each day in the Library an updated report of the number of cases of blue ear disease and premises restricted, including the number of premises and their locations; and if he will also make a copy of this available to the hon. Member for South Shields at the same time.

Mr. Gummer: I have taken care to inform the House and the public at large of all significant developments in the current disease outbreak. I am arranging for the Library to receive a copy of the weekly returns made to the European Commission detailing the parishes in which one or more cases of the disease have been confirmed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Immigration (Islamabad)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of visas granted and the number of refusals, arising from interviews undertaken in Islamabad for entry into Britain on 22 April.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of visas granted and refused in Islamabad on 22 April was as follows:

	Number
Granted	190
Refused	74

India

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has on the number of detentions without trial, the number of disappeared suspects and the number of deaths in detention in the Punjab in the current year.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In January, the Indian Government announced that the number of detentions in the Punjab were 145 in 1988, 35 in 1989 and 16 in January-October 1990 under the National Security Act, and 3,685 in 1988, 2,146 in 1989 and 982 in January-September 1990 under the Terrorist and Disruptive Activities Act. No more recent figures are available. We have no official information on numbers of disappeared suspects or of deaths occurring in Indian prisons.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Government of India on the level of human rights violations and abuse of the law in the Punjab in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Indian Government are well aware of our concerns about human rights abuses, from our regular contacts with them. We have encouraged them to exercise maximum restraint in dealing with the serious terrorist violence they face as exemplified by the appalling massacre of train passengers by Sikh terrorists on 12 June.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report by Amnesty International on the Punjab, dated 10 May.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The FCO library has already received this report.

Eire

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make inquiries of the appropriate authorities in Eire to ascertain why three students from Shipley college, two Pakistani nationals the other a Bangladeshi national, all settled in the United Kingdom, were refused visas to enter Eire on 18 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: It is not the practice of Her Majesty's Government to intervene on behalf of foreign nationals who have been refused visas by independent sovereign states.

Diplomats

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the training of diplomats from central and eastern Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following a recent competitive tender I am happy to announce that in the autumn the institute of international studies at Leeds university under the guiding hands of Professor David Dilks and Dr. John Hemery, will run a course to improve the skills of over 50 diplomats from a number of central and eastern European countries. This is a further aspect of the know-how fund programme to help the process of radical change in the civil services of those newly democratised countries.

HEALTH

General Practice Budgets

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the names and addresses of the general practices that will be budget holders in Northumberland from 1 April.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand from the chairman of the Northern regional health authority that there are eight general practices within the Northumberland family health services authority participating in the first wave of fundholding. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Carr, the chairman of the Northern regional health authority for details.

Expenditure, North Staffordshire

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much expenditure on the national health service has increased in North Staffordshire in (a) real and (b) cash terms since May 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The North Staffordshire health authority was established on 1 April 1982. The annual accounts of the authority record total revenue expenditure of £71·2 million cash for 1982-83 and £124·0 million cash for 1989-90—the latest year available. Those figures represent increases of 74·2 per cent. in cash terms and 20·7 per cent. in real terms, measured at 1989-90 prices.

Prior to 1 April 1982 the authority's predecessor health district formed part of the larger Staffordshire area health authority. The annual accounts of the health authorities responsible for services in Staffordshire as a whole record total expenditure of £68·3 million cash for 1978-79 and £234·9 million cash for 1989-90. Those figures represent increases of 244 per cent. in cash terms and 47 per cent. in real terms, measured at 1989-90 prices.

HIV

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking to identify the level of HIV infection in the United Kingdom and the consequential cost to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The surveillance of HIV infection and AIDS is based on voluntary confidential reporting by clinicians of AIDS cases, monitoring of named HIV-1 tests through laboratory reports, a collaborative study in selected laboratories of named HIV tests, and the unlinked anonymous HIV prevalence monitoring programme. In England and Wales this surveillance effort is co-ordinated by the public health laboratory services AIDS centre which is part of the PHLS communicable disease surveillance centre. For the period April 1990 to March 1991 the PHLS AIDS centre received £415,000 to conduct AIDS surveillance and named HIV test monitoring and a further £678,000 was awarded to the PHLS by the Medical Research Council to conduct unlinked anonymous HIV prevalence monitoring.

Brook Hospital

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Brook hospital defence campaign and from the Greenwich "Hands off the NHS" group.

Mr. Dorrell: We have received a letter from one right hon. Member on behalf of the "Hands off the NHS" group. No representations have been received from the Brook hospital defence campaign.

Project 2000

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to establish a formal mechanism for the annual review of the level of bursaries paid to nursing students pursuing Project 2000 courses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. Bursary levels will continue to be kept under review in the light of all relevant circumstances, in particular recruitment and retention.

Polycyclic Aromatic Hydrocarbons

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive results for work on polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons from (a) the laboratory of the Government Chemist and (b) the London school of Tropical Hygiene, referred to in his answer of 12 June, Official Report, column 558.

Mr. Dorrell: This Department has received a pre-publication copy of the report of the results of the study, by the laboratory of the Government Chemist, of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons present in cigarette smoke and they are included in a paper, "Yields of tar and other smoke components from UK cigarettes", which has been accepted for publication in the journal "Food and Chemical Toxicology", July 1991 issue, expected to appear late August. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The results of the investigation by the small area health statistics unit at the London school of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine into incidences of cancer and mortality rates around incinerators is expected this autumn. The results of its coking work investigations may take longer and it is not possible to give an expected date yet. The reports of both studies will be made public.

SCOTLAND

Water Boreholes

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what change has taken place over the past 10 years in the proportion of water extracted from boreholes rather than directly from watercourses; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the 10 years to 1989, the water available for public supply from boreholes in Scotland increased from 0·4 to 1·6 per cent. of the available yield from all public sources. Surface water sources provide for over 96 per cent. of all Scottish public water supplies, the remainder coming from boreholes or springs.

River Purification Boards

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the river purification boards on the application of control orders under the conditions of the Spray Irrigation Act (Scotland) 1964; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Environment Department has long been aware that the river purification boards consider the arrangements for control orders under the Spray Irrigation (Scotland) Act 1964 inadequate. In particular, the procedures to be followed to obtain an order are seen as too bureaucratic.

New provisions are, therefore, included in the Natural Heritage (Scotland) Act 1991 to simplify these procedures and to extend control to all abstractions for irrigation purposes.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to bring forward amending legislation to give Scottish river purification boards the same powers as the National Rivers Authority in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no plans to make further amendments to the powers of the seven Scottish river purification boards. Scotland has enjoyed independent protection for the water environment since the 1950s and the powers of the boards to prevent and control pollution have been progressively strengthened during this period.

Investment, Paisley

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investment plans there are for the Foxbar Rivers area of Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For 1991-92 Renfrew district council has been allocated resources of £23·761 million to support capital investment in its own housing stock and private sector housing in Renfrew district. Apart from £0·757 million of this sum which is earmarked to fund innovative housing projects in the Ferguslie Park urban partnership area, it is a matter for the council to determine how best to deploy these considerable resources to meet local housing needs including those of the Foxbar Rivers area of Paisley if this area is considered a priority. The council's future investment plans for the Foxbar Rivers area should be included in the capital programme which the council is due to submit to the Scottish Office later this year.

Homelessness

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the Scottish Office currently spends to tackle homelessness in Scotland; how many applicants were permanently housed last year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The statutory responsibility for assisting homeless people lies with local authorities.

Housing capital allocation issued to local authorities for 1991-92 are £452·504 million for housing revenue account expenditure and £111·097 million for non-housing revenue account expenditure, and include £3·5 million for homelessness projects in eight local authorities. Apart from the £3·5 million, the resources are not specifically identified to deal with homelessness, but local authorities may use general allocations for homelessness where this is seen as a local priority.

Almost all of Scottish Homes planned capital programme for 1991-92 of £312 million will contribute in some way to tackling homelessness; and in particular, over the past two years Scottish Homes has funded more than 1,000 units which specifically cater for the homeless.

In addition, revenue exxpenditure of £1·425 million has been made available through housing support grant to fund the estimated deficits on the provison of hostels by local authority housing departments.

Other funding has been made available as follows:

revenue grant assistance of £47,568 has been made available by my right hon. Friend to the Scottish Council for the Single Homeless; a grant of £50,000 has been made to the Centre for Housing Research at Glasgow University for on-going research into the prevention and management of homelessness; a total of £50,000 for each of the financial years 1991-92 to 1993-94 has been made available for the establishment of projects by voluntary organisations for single roofless young people;

funding of some £305,000 capital and £625,000 revenue was provided under the urban programme for homelessness related projects in 1990-91.

In 1989-90, the last year for which figures are available, 7,525 applicants who were assessed as homeless were found permanent accommodation and 4,681 of those assessed as potentially homeless.

External Funding

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Scottish Office external funding was applied to (a) the city of Glasgow district council, (b) the city of Dundee district council, (c) the city of Aberdeen district council, (d) Renfrew district council, (e) Bearsden and Milngavie district council and (f) Eastwood district council in (i) total and (ii) per capita terms in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is set out in the table. Prior to 1990-91, Government support to local authorities for general fund expenditure comprised rate or revenue support grant, and, in the case of district authorities, very small amounts of specific grant. For 1990-91 and 1991-92, aggregate external finance also included non-domestic rate income following the central determination of rate poundages.

Notes:

1. Total government support comprises Revenue Support Grants for the years 1979-80 to 1989-90. For 1990-91 and 1991-92 external finance comprises RSG plus Specific Grants and estimated non-domestic rate income and in 1991-92 community charge grant is also included. Specific Grants were also paid in earlier years but figures are not readily available and therefore have been excluded.
2. Transactions on the Housing Revenue Account are excluded.
3. The per capita figures were calculated using the mid-year population estimates relevant to each year in question.

Race Relations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many racially motivated incidents were reported to each police force in Scotland in 1988, 1989 and 1990; what was the nature of the incidents reported; and what was the outcome.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of apparently racially motivated incidents reported to each police force in Scotland in the years in question are set out in the table.

Police force	Number of incidents 1988	1989	1990
Central Scotland police	9	18	45

[1] Not available.
[2] Since August 1989.

The majority of the incidents reported related to verbal abuse, breach of the peace, vandalism and assault. Forces have different methods of categorising outcomes; Strathclyde police reported a 90 per cent. detection rate in 1990 as regards the incidents in question.

House Construction

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost of constructing a (a) two-apartment, (b) three-apartment and (c) four-apartment house by (i) local authorities in Scotland and (ii) Scottish Homes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest available information was published in October 1989 in Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin HSU No. 10, a copy of which is in the Library. Updated information will be published later this year.

Green Belts

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to review policies relating to green belts in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The policy relating to green belts in Scotland is set out in the Scottish Development Department's circular 24/1985. All planning guidance is to be reviewed following a commitment contained in the White Paper on the environment "This Common Inheritance"—Cm. 1200—and a consultation paper on the scope of the review will be issued over the summer.

Local Government Finance

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the level of community charge and (b) the per capita contribution from the Scottish Office, for each district council in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information for 1991-92 is set out in the table.

1. The figures in Column 1 take account of the Community Charge (General Reduction) Act 1991.
2. Total government support includes revenue support grant, community charge grant, estimated non-domestic rate income and estimated specific grants for each authority.
3. The figures in Column 2 were calculated using the population figures at June 1990.

Public Flood Warning Systems

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statutory requirements are in operation to provide advance public warning of flooding around the Scottish coast; if he will list those places which have a standard advance public flood warning system in operation; what form these systems take; what Government assistance is provided for this purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1991]: River purification boards and islands councils have powers to provide and operate flood warning systems for their areas under the Agriculture Act 1970 as amended by the Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act 1982. However, there is no statutory requirement to provide advance warning of flooding. At present, flood warning systems, which depend on information from critical parts of the catchment, are in operation for several major rivers in Scotland. There are none specifically for coastal flooding.

The capital cost of providing flood warning systems is included in the capital expenditure allocations made to river purification boards and islands authorities. Operating costs are part of their normal revenue expenditure.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Family Law

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will state the composition of the family law administration working party; and when it last met.

The Solicitor-General: The family law and administration working party is chaired by a senior official of the Lord Chancellor's Department and its membership consists of officials of the Department of Health, Home Office, Department of Social Security, the Treasury and the Lord Chancellor's Department. The family law and administration working party last met on 5 February 1991.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the progress being made by the family law administration working party.

The Attorney-General: To date the working party has been primarily concerned with the very large number of arrangements necessary for the implementation of the Children Act 1989. The main parts of that Act are to take effect on 14 October 1991. Following implementation, the working party will proceed to review the other aspects of family law, as announced by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor on the Second Reading of the Children Bill on 6 December 1988, including the role and organisation of the support services, the reform of divorce law following publication of the Law Commission report and the law relating to domestic violence.

British National Party

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration the Director of Public Prosecutions is giving to prosecution of the British National party on grounds of incitement to racial hatred.

The Attorney-General: The Greater Manchester police have submitted a report to the Crown prosecution service concerning a meeting held by the British National party on 27 April 1991 at a school in Rochdale. This report is currently being considered by the Crown prosecution service with a view to determining whether any offence contrary to the Public Order Act 1986 or the Representation of the People Act 1983 has been committed by any individual.

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he intends to announce his decision to authorise investment in class 373 rolling stock to provide a daytime service from the channel tunnel beyond London;

(2) whether tenders have been received for the manufacture of class 373 rolling stock to provide a daytime service from the channel tunnel beyond London.

Mr. Rifkind: British Rail is discussing with the manufacturers their recent proposals for the rolling stock to form the north of London day services. It is, therefore, not yet ready to submit an investment case.

A27

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to announce possible routes for the A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement scheme; how many options he intends to publish; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I hope that public consultation on possible routes for the A27 Lewes to Polegate improvement will begin around the end of this year. It is too early to say how many options will be published for comment.

M62 (Junction 13)

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when junction 13 on the M62 motorway at Worsley will be reopened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Junction 13 was reopened fully at 9 pm on Friday 28 June.

HGV Speed Limiters

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish regulations requiring heavy goods vehicles to be fitted with speed limiters; and when he will announce firm proposals for speed limiters to be fitted to existing vehicles.

Mr. Chope: I have signed regulations today that require that speed limiters must be fitted to all new heavy goods vehicles of over 7·5 tonnes gross vehicle weight as from 1 August 1992.

Consultations are also beginning on draft regulations that will require speed limiters to be fitted to certain classes of existing heavy goods vehicles first used after 1 August 1988. The regulations will apply to all vehicles that have a gross vehicle weight in excess of 16 tonnes, and, additionally in the case of rigid-bodied vehicles, where the gross train weight is more than 5 tonnes greater than the gross vehicle weight.

The regulations for new vehicles give vehicle manufacturers and operators plenty of notice of the change; and I expect that regulations for vehicles that are already on the road will be laid before the House shortly.

Automated Weighbridges

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has concluded his consideration of the consultants' report on automated weighbridges referred to in his answer of 27 June 1990, Official Report, column 211; if he intends to extend the installation of automated weighing systems beyond the five points which already have this facility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 17 April 1991]: The consultants found that certain automatic, self-weigh systems worked well technically, but were largely ineffective without the presence of enforcement officers. We have, therefore, concluded that the most effective deterrent to overloading continues to be weight checks carried out by traffic examiners.

On the more general question of enforcement at weighbridge sites, at inland locations and at ferry ports, I have asked the vehicle inspectorate to review the Department's current programme. The review will be completed by the end of this year.

M40

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the carriageways of the M40 between junction 1 and Windsor road, Gerrards cross, which are currently under repair are resurfaced with pervious macadam rather than hot rolled asphalt.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 1 July 1991]: We are not able to justify the use of pervious macadam on this section of motorway. Pervious macadam costs more than conventional road surfacing and requires more frequent renewal maintenance. Further research is continuing on the use of this type of surfacing and it is hoped that in due course the causes of the additional costs will be overcome.

Ferry Safety

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to take any action to impose higher standards of residual stability on existing roll on/roll off ferries using British ports as recommended by the steering committee of the roll on/roll off ferry safety research programme.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The higher standard of residual stability recommended by the steering committee of the roll on/roll off ferry safety research programme, will be applied to existing roll on/roll off ferries using British ports in accordance with procedures agreed by the International Maritime Organisation.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing for the latest two years now available and for planned expenditure in 1991-92, identifiable general Government expenditure by function in England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland and the United Kingdom, expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) as a percentage of United Kingdom total identifiable general Government expenditure, (c) as an amount per capita and (d) as an amount per capita expressed as an index where United Kingdom identifiable Government expenditure = 100.

Mr. Mellor: The data requested for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90, the latest years for which information is available, are given in tables E4 and E5 of appendix E of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1990 Autumn Statement"—Cm. 1520. Corresponding data for 1991-92 are not available.

Car Allowances

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the proportions of private cars, or car mileage as a proportion of the respective totals, where the costs incurred by the vehicles are not wholly met by the taxable income of their owners or drivers.

Mr. Maude: About one third of cars available for use by members of private households are either supplied by employers, or qualify for tax relief against schedule D income tax liability, or attract some allowance for business mileage.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the definition adopted by the Inland Revenue to identify large employers for the purposes of enforcing payment of remittances by the 19 of any month.

Mr. Maude: For the purposes of collecting PAYE and national insurance contributions remittances the Inland Revenue define large employers as those paying over £4,500 per month.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the expected additional revenue in 1991-92 from value added tax resulting from the increase from 15 to 17·5 per cent.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is published in table 1.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1991-92".

THE ARTS

English National Opera

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list for each of the last five years and for this year to date at today's prices, the amount of Government funding English National Opera has received; and if he will make a statement as to what controls his Office has over the way it is used.

Mr. Renton: Grants to individual arts companies are made by the Arts Council of Great Britain and the regional arts associations. Arts Council grants to English National Opera for the period in question were as follows:

Year	Actual grant	1991-92 real terms equivalent
1986-87	6,626,000	9,197,043
1987-88	6,748,000	8,892,030
1988-89	6,917,000	8,482,962
1989-90	7,056,000	8,135,004
1990-91	9,104,000	9,741,238
1991-92	10,432,300	—

I set the overall financial framework within which the Arts Council operates; the Arts Council, in turn, attaches conditions to its grants to individual companies relating to their artistic and financial performance.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Grocery Retailing

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider whether there are prima facie grounds for investigating whether there are scale and complex monopolies within the grocery retail sector.

Mr. Redwood: The Director General of Fair Trading continues to keep markets under review, but I understand that at present he has no evidence of abuse of market power that would justify a monopoly investigation of the retail grocery sector. Any evidence of abuse should be referred to the director general.

Telecommunications

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the telecommunications industry.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 July 1991]: Telecommunications is one of the most dynamic industries in the United Kingdom. The market has grown rapidly, stimulated by the Government's commitment to competition and increased customer choice. In mobile telephony we have the two largest cellular networks in the world. In March, I announced that we would be ending the duopoly policy in the fixed telephony market, and allowing new companies to enter the market. We have already received five formal applications for new licences and more than 20 strong expressions of interests. This is good for the industry and good for consumers.

Expenditure Shortfall

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what reasons account for the £12 million shortfall between planned and actual spending on capital building work in voluntary aided and special agreement schools in 1990-91; and whether he expects this shortfall to be repeated in 1991-92.

Mr. Fallon: The underspend of £12 million on total planned expenditure of £87 million 1990-91 resulted from the failure on the part of voluntary bodies and LEAs to spend up to the level allocated on a significant number of building projects. This resulted in an underspend of grant of some £10 million, which did, however, enable the Department to meet more requests for grant for external repairs to voluntary-aided schools therefore exceeding budget provision by some £7 million.

We hope to avoid a shortfall in 1991-92 by introducing the design list procedure whereby many of the named major projects have had preliminary plans approved and are therefore expected to progress according to schedule. None the less, the Department will be asking authorities to confirm current year expenditure plans in September so that any spare resources can be identified and reallocated.

Nuclear Structure Facility

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will instruct the Science and Engineering Research Council to issue a correction of its report, "The Laboratories in the 1990s", in the light of its proposal to close the nuclear structure facility.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Publication of this report, presented to the SERC in July 1990, was a matter for the SERC. It is for the council to consider whether, in due course, it wishes to publish an updated report taking account of developments since that date.

Braille (Examination Papers)

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will discuss with examination boards the need for exam papers to be produced in braille;

(2) what information he has concerning the cost of individually and mass-producing examination papers in braille.

Mr. Eggar: Officials from the Department have had discussions about the braille needs of visually impaired examination candidates with the Royal National Institute for the Blind, with the secretaries of the GCE examining boards for A-level and AS-examinations, and with the Joint Council for the GCSE. Figures provided by these bodies suggest that the cost of translating an average length examination paper into braille lies between £240 and £480; significant savings are possible where the same paper is used by several candidates.

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's policy on ensuring blind and partially sighted higher and further education students have adequate access to the examination process.

Mr. Eggar: The Government are concerned to ensure that students with disabilities, including those who are blind or partially sighted, should have equal access to further and higher education. It is a matter for individual institutions, in consultation as appropriate with qualification awarding bodies, to ensure that suitable arrangements are made for the assessment of individual students.

Agricultural and Food Research Council

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the names and locations of all the AFRC establishments that have been closed since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The following AFRC research establishments have closed since 1979:

Letcombe Laboratory, Wantage
Weed Research Organisation, Begbroke, Oxford
Meat Research Institute, Bristol
Unit of Animal Genetics, Edinburgh
Unit of Invertebrate Chemistry and Physiology, Sussex
Unit of Muscle Mechanisms and Insect Physiology, Cambridge

The AFRC has also undertaken a programme of Institute restructuring which has involved some relocation of research establishments. This has been necessary to match the pace of scientific advance and opportunity and the shift in Government support from near-market to basic research. The concentration of AFRC's research base on to fewer sites will allow greater concentration of resources in its priority areas.

Funding to the AFRC from the science budget has increased by 37 per cent. in real terms since 1979. The AFRC continues to fund excellent work at the frontiers of science.

ENVIRONMENT

Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether schedule 5 of the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 authorises a charge by a bailiff even where no visit has been made.

Mr. Portillo: No. Bailiffs cannot charge the debtor for work under schedule 5 of the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 if no visit is made. However, that does not preclude the bailiffs' charging the local authority for any work they have undertaken.

London

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to ensure that London's position is fully represented within the discussions that affect it within government.

Mr. Heseltine: I take all appropriate steps to ensure fair representation of London's interest. Within my Department I have a London regional office to advise me on matters directly affecting London and I consult widely, particularly with London boroughs, their associations and many other bodies with London-wide concerns.

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the money raised by the uniform business rate in London is spent in London.

Mr. Key: In total local authorities in London received £1·5 billion from the non-domestic rates pool in 1990-91, and provisionally paid £2·7 billion into the pool during 1990-91. The latter figure does not represent the amounts of non-domestic rates raised from properties in London, because, first, properties on the central and Crown lists make payments direct to the non-domestic rates pool—it is not known how much of the total yield from these properties relates to London—and secondly, the provisional contribution made by local authorities to the non-domestic rates pool is calculated on the basis of the rateable value of properties on the local rating list as at 31 December 1989. Information about the actual rates payable in respect of 1990-91 is not likely to be available until November 1991.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the budget of each urban development corporation to cover the provision for training in each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish information giving details of the capital provided in the budget for all the urban development corporations for the provision of housing for the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Key: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the initiatives promoted by each of the urban development corporations to assist tourism since their inception.

Mr. Key: The UDCs' programmes include a wide variety of projects which help to promote tourism. Examples are:

the restoration of Albert dock in Liverpool;

support for local festivals, such as those held in Manchester and Wolverhampton; visitor centres in Trafford Park and Teeside, and the Bede monastery museum in Jarrow;

environmental works to rivers, canals and pathways in many UDCs, including Sheffield and Bristol;

the London Docklands development corporation's six-year programme of funding for local tourist initiatives, including grants to local listed buildings such as St. Matthias church.

the development of hotel and leisure facilities in several UDCs.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of houses provided by each of the urban development corporations for each year of operation to 31 March.

Mr. Key: The available information is contained in the tables.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his answer to the hon. Member for Bristol, South of 10 June, Official Report, column 385, (1) what are the current arrangements with urban development corporations to fund the cost of unfinished projects;

(2) whether suitable arrangements for the winding up of uncompleted projects begun by urban development corporations will involve the Government's meeting the full cost of completion, or part of the cost.

Mr. Key: Arrangements have not yet been determined.

Community Charge

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list for each local authority the percentage of community charge uncollected at 31 March.

Mr. Key: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the cost would be of abolishing the minimum 20 per cent. contribution to the poll tax.

Miss Widdecombe: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 27 June 1991 at column 519.

District Council Newspapers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department's library receives copies of the Basildon district council newspaper "Basildon Link" and Thurrock borough council newspaper "Thurrock Voice".

Mr. Heseltine: No.

Toxocara

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what analysis his Department carries out on the presence of toxocara canis in soil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The matter of pet-borne infections is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. My Department has not carried out any research into the presence of toxocara canis in the soil.

Urban Development Initiative

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria were used to decide the recent list of cities to be included in the Government's new urban development initiative programme.

Mr. Key: City challenge is a new initiative through which local authorities are asked to provide local leadership for the regeneration of critical areas of their towns and cities. The authorities will bring together the relevant interests in their areas—the private sector, voluntary sector and local residents—to draw up plans for economic, social and environmental renewal. The initiative has been launched this year through a pilot scheme in which 15 authorities were invited to bid for 10 places as pacemaker authorities. Provided this pilot competition is successful, we intend there will be a full competition open to urban programme authorities in 1992.

The 15 authorities invited to participate in this year's pilot exercise were chosen to represent a wide range of circumstances across the country and for their ability to work up imaginative plans quickly.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether farmers in (a) environmentally sensitive areas and (b) national parks will be eligible for payment under the countryside stewardship scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Countryside stewardship payments will not be available where funding is available under the ESA scheme. However, the Countryside Commission may, at its discretion, agree payment in an ESA under the stewardship scheme for items not covered by the ESA scheme, for example access. The position is made clear in the scheme literature.

So far as national parks are concerned, farmers and other landowners and managers who have land within the landscape types targeted by the scheme may apply provided they are not receiving public funding already for work and management practices covered by the stewardship scheme.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the topics of each television advertising campaign to be carried out by his Department and any other publicity campaign costing more than £100,000.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 1 July 1991]: My Department has no plans to use television advertising in any of its publicity work in the current financial year. We have two proposed publicity campaigns, which are estimated to cost more than £100,000. These are the joint campaign with the Department of Energy on the environment and home energy efficiency and a campaign to alert all businesses to the duty of care under section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Council Tax (Exemptions)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if those exempt from poll tax because of severe mental handicap will be exempted from the council tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 2 July 1991]: We have proposed that people who are severely mentally impaired should be entitled to personal discounts under the council tax if they would otherwise give rise to a higher bill for the property in which they live.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 3 July 1991]: My Department's policy, in respect of the relevant recommendations of the disability manifesto, is to increase opportunities for people with disabilities to participate fully in the life of the community. A major and continuing initiative is the introduction and implementation of building regulations aimed at making the built environment accessible to disabled people. On this and all other policy issues of concern to disabled people for which I have responsibility, my Department's practice is to consult with organisations representing disabled people.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for 4 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Immigration

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place the official record of the briefing concerning immigration given on his behalf during the Luxembourg meetings of the European Council in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement I made in the House on 1 July, and the conclusions of the European Council, which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 3 July 1991]: The aim underlying the Government's policies for people with disabilities is to enable them to take a full part in the life of the community. Considerable progress has been made towards this goal over the past 12 years, and, while much remains to be done, we are continuing to build on these achievements.

This Government will continue to work towards enabling people with disabilities to live independently as far as possible, and to contribute fully to all aspects of the life of the community.

As the right hon. Member has asked similar questions of a number of my right hon. Friends, I have asked them to outline the major initiatives of their departmental programmes for people with disabilities.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the number of man hours spent in ADAS on (a) charged statutory work, (b) chargeable advice, (c) non-chargeable advice and (d) non-chargeable statutory work for each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: ADAS began charging for services generally on 1 April 1987. Information for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 is not available in the form requested.

Information for the years 1988-89 to 1990-91 is as follows:

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
(a) Charged statutory work	109,074	88,911	108,032
(b) Chargeable advice	1,229,570	2,554,089	2,191,263
(c) Non-chargeable advice	137,705	477,948	560,003
(d) Non-chargeable statutory work	685,588	1,283,431	1,555,490

Notes:

(a) There have been structural changes in ADAS during this period. Figures are for ADAS as it was constituted at the time.
(b) Includes hours spent on work for MAFF/Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce.
(c) Figures for 1989-90 onwards include directly attributable overheads—training, leave, management, and so on. Figures for 1988-89 exclude overheads.

Veterinary Investigation Centres

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the closure dates for each of the veterinary investigation centres which are due to be closed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The veterinary investigation centre at Wye will close on 31 July 1991; the Bangor centre will close on 30 September 1991. The closure dates for the Lincoln and Truro centres have not yet been finally decided. The Cambridge and Norwich centres will close when the new centre at Bury St. Edmunds is opened in 1993. The Worcester centre will close when the new centre in Warwickshire is opened in 1993. The Reading centre will close when the Winchester centre is enhanced and the new Warwickshire centre is opened in 1993.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the counties which fall into each currently operating veterinary investigation centres catchment area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The counties and areas covered by the national network of veterinary investigation centres in England and Wales are generally defined by county boundaries but there is however a degree of flexibility to meet local requirements. The specific counties and other areas which form the catchment areas for the currently operating veterinary investigation centres in England and Wales are:

Bristol (Langford) VIC:
Avon, Somerset, Dorset and parts of Gloucestershire, Wiltshire and Gwent.

Cambridge VIC:
Essex, Cambridgeshire, Bedfordshire and parts of Greater London, Suffolk, Northamptonshire and Hertfordshire.

Lincoln VIC:
North Humberside, South Humberside, Lincolnshire and parts of Nottinghamshire, South Yorkshire, Leicestershire and West Yorkshire.

Newcastle VIC:
Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, County Durham and Cleveland.

Norwich VIC:
Norfolk and parts of Suffolk.

Penrith VIC:
Cumbria and parts of North Lancashire, Northumberland and West Yorkshire.

Preston (Barton Hall) VIC:
Lancashire, Cheshire, Greater Manchester, Merseyside, Isle of Man and parts of Yorkshire, Cumbria, Staffordshire and Derbyshire.

Reading VIC:
Berkshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Surrey, Guernsey, Jersey and parts of Wiltshire, Northamptonshire, Gloucestershire, Middlesex, Greater London and Hertfordshire.

Shrewsbury VIC:
Shropshire, Staffordshire, West Midlands Metropolitan County and parts of Cheshire, Powys, Clwyd, Warwickshire and Derbyshire.

Starcross VIC:
Devon and parts of Cornwall, Somerset and Dorset.

Sutton Bonington VIC:
Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Leicestershire and parts of Staffordshire, South Yorkshire, Northamptonshire and Lincolnshire.

Thirsk VIC:
North Yorkshire, West Yorkshire and parts of South Yorkshire, North Humberside, Cleveland and County Durham.

Truro (Polwhele) VIC:
Cornwall, Isle of Scilly and parts of Devon.

Winchester VIC:
Hampshire, Isle of Wight, West Sussex and parts of Dorset, Wiltshire and Surrey.

Worcester VIC:
Hereford and Worcester, Warwickshire and parts of Gwent, Gloucestershire and West Midlands.

Wye VIC:
Kent, East Sussex and parts of Greater London, Surrey and West Sussex.

Aberystwyth VIC:
Powys and parts of Dyfed and Gwynedd.

Bangor VIC:
Gwynedd and Clwyd.

Carmarthen VIC:
Mid Glamorgan, West Glamorgan, South Glamorgan and parts of Dyfed, Powys and Gwent.

Countryside Premium Scheme

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to start administering the countryside premium scheme.

Mr. Curry: It is our intention to take over responsibility for the scheme and, subject to review and obtaining the necessary EC powers, extend it nationally. However, the final form and timing of adoption of the necessary EC proposals are uncertain.

North York Moors Farms

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the funding his Ministry has contributed to the North York Moors national park farm scheme in each of the last three years; what plans he has for the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: This scheme is financed through the usual funding arrangements for national parks in which my Department has no involvement. However, farmers participating in the scheme may also benefit from the farm and conservation grant scheme funded by my Department. The Agricultural Development and Advisory Service is also available to offer advice and assistance in furtherance of the aims of the scheme, which has my full support.

HEALTH

Breast Feeding

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has for 1990, for each social class of partner or husband, on the percentages of mothers who breastfed (a) initially and (b) when their baby had reached the age of six weeks;

(2) what information he has about the percentage of women breastfeeding their babies (a) initially and (b) at six weeks in 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information for 1990 is unlikely to be published before next year. The table sets out the information requested for the years 1975, 1980 and 1985 in England and Wales.

England and Wales

	1975 Percentage	1980 Percentage	1985 Percentage
Birth	51	67	65
Six weeks	24	42	40

Source: OPCS surveys.

In the recently published Green Paper "The Health of the Nation" we have proposed that we should aim to increase the rates of breast feeding at birth by 75 per cent. and six weeks by 50 per cent. by the year 2000.

Clinical Standards Advisory Group

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what (a) financial and (b) personal resources have been allocated to support the work of the clinical standards advisory group;

(2) how often the clinical standards advisory group has met;

(3) if he will make it his policy to publish an annual report on the work of the clinical standards advisory group;

(4) if he will make it his policy that work done by the clinical standards advisory group should be made available to the public;

(5) if he will make it his policy to publish a response to each report produced by the clinical standards advisory group;

(6) how often the clinical standards advisory group will publish its findings;

(7) if he will list the members of the clinical standards advisory group;

(8) what authority will be given to the clinical standards advisory group to initiate its own areas of work;

(9) when the Clinical Standards Advisory Group had its first meeting.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Clinical Standards Advisory Group comprises a chairman and 16 members as follows:

Dr. Gordon Higginson (Chairman)
Professor June Clark
Professor Roy Duckworth
Sir Terence English
Miss Pam Hibbs
Miss Jennifer Hunt
Miss Rosemary Jenkins
Miss Wilma Macpherson
Dr. Michael O'Brien
Professor Eurfil Rhys Davies
Professor John Richmond
Professor Michael Rosen
Mr. Derek Seel
Dr. Nuala Sterling
Professor Victor Tindall
Dr. Colin Waine
Professor Sir Dillwyn Williams

In addition, the General Medical Council, the General Dental Council, the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, the General Medical Services Committee and the Joint Consultants Committee have each nominated an observer to attend meetings.

Under section 62 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, the CSAG will report to Health Ministers, and to NHS bodies, on the remits that each may give to the group. Health Ministers will normally publish reports made to them together with their responses. NHS bodies which commission work by the group will decide on the handling of the group's reports. Health Ministers will expect to receive and publish periodic overview reports from the group on its work at suitable intervals.

The CSAG has no statutory authority to initiate its own areas of work. However, Health Ministers will attach importance to the views of the group on the areas of work which they might be invited to cover. Health Ministers provide administrative and professional support to the CSAG from within their Departments. In 1991-92 £900,000 has been set aside to meet secretariat and other costs arising from the group's work.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the amounts allocated by each regional health authority in 1991-92 for the (a) training of managers in the national health service, (b) postgraduate medical education and (c) continuing medical education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 14 June at column 684.

Occupational Therapy Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has issued guidance to health and local authorities on their responsibilities in providing an occupational therapy service in the community.

Mr. Dorrell: Guidance to health and local authorities on occupational therapy services was issued in 1985. There was further guidance in a 1988 health notice (HN(88)26), a copy of which is available in the Library, on the development of services for people with physical or sensory disabilities. A report by the social services inspectorate on local authority occupational therapy services is to be published shortly.

Chronic Sick and Disabled Units

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued to health authorities for the relocation of people being moved from young chronic sick and disabled units.

Mr. Dorrell: Health circular HC(89)5, a copy of which is available in the Library, on the discharge of patients from hospital was issued in February 1989 together with an explanatory booklet about procedures to be followed.

Dentures

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on his policy regarding the direct provision to the public of dentures by denturists.

Mr. Dorrell: The General Dental Council may make regulations to establish classes of dental auxiliaries who may undertake dental work. These may not, however, permit auxiliaries to fit, insert or fix dentures or artificial teeth. It is considered that only registered dental or medical practitioners are competent to recognise pathological conditions which may be caused or exacerbated by dentures.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the planned reductions and planned increases in staff by each national health service trust from which he obtained the net figure of 200 which he gave in the debate on 14 May, Official Report, column 174, specifying the planning period in each case.

Mr. Waldegrave: No; as I said in the debate, many trusts are expanding and some are contracting. The prime responsibility of NHS trusts is to provide services and they will make their manpower plans in response to demand from health authorities and other purchasers. Therefore, the plans are likely to change over time.

Neonatal Intensive Care

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each region and for England as a whole the number of neonatal intensive care cots.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 15 October 1990 at columns 667-74. We expect figures for 1990-91 to be completed by the end of September.

Ativan

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of prescriptions of Ativan in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 3 July 1991]: The information requested is as follows:

Great Britain
Number of prescriptions
(thousands)

Ativan Tab 1mg	543·1	0·5	0·1	—	—

Note:
1. Ativan was included in a list of drugs not prescribable at NHS expense from April 1985. However, its generic form, Lorazepam, remains prescribable.
2. These figures are based on a sample of dispensed prescriptions of approximately 1 in 200 in England and Wales and 1 in 100 in Scotland.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans or proposals he has for merging or re-organising the district health authorities in Greater London.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 July 1991]: We have no plans to reorganise health authorities. Any proposal to merge district health authorities in London or elsewhere is a matter for the regional health authority concerned. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made it clear to regional health authorities that consultation on any such proposals has to be wide and that Ministers need to be convinced that they are in the interests of local people and of the national health service generally.

WALES

Blue Ear Pig Disease

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he is undertaking to prevent the spread of blue ear pig disease into Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The Blue Ear Pig Disease Order 1991 was introduced in June. This order makes suspicion of the disease notifiable, allows for the declaration of infected places and infected areas by special orders and allows movement restrictions to be placed on premises exposed to infection pending a veterinary investigation.

Fallen Animals

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the average knacker charge for the collection of (a) bovine casualties and (b) ruminant casualties in each year from 1979 onwards on the basis of 1989-90 prices in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The charging by knackers for the removal of carcases is a comparatively recent development resulting from changes in the market for animal by-products. Details of these charges are not available in the form requested, but is understood that the current average ranges of charges in Wales are as follows:

Adult cattle	10-30
Calves	2-5
Sheep	4-8

Birth Statistics

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for 1990 for the residents of (a) Wales and (b) each NHS district within Wales (i) the number of live births (ii) the percentage of live births with unstated birth weight (iii) the number of live births with stated birth weight and (iv) the percentages of these, which were under 1000g, 1000g to 1499g, 1500g to 1999g, 2000g to 2499g, 2500g to 2999g, 3000g to 3499g, 3500g to 3999g and 4000g and above.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is given in the table and is derived from all registered births to residents of Wales:

A44

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to improve the trunk road A44 between Rhydlydan and Llwynhowel, Ponterwyd Sir Aberteifi within the next three years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: We have no plans to carry out improvement to the A44 in that area to that time scale.

Employment Training

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many adults with learning difficulties were undertaking employment training in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many are in training in the current year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of employment training placements for the last available financial year were in workplaces with employers; and what percentage were in project-based schemes.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The estimated percentages of ET participants on placements with employers and with projects as at 31 March 1991 were 27 and 28 per cent. respectively. Financial year information is not available.

Earnings

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the distribution of gross weekly earnings of full-time persons in (a) Wales, (b) the counties of Gwynedd, Clwyd, Powys and Dyfed, (c) the administrative district of Snowdonia national park and (d) the district of Meirionnydd as at April 1991.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest available information, for April 1990, relating to the distribution of gross weekly earnings of full-time employees on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence, is given in the table:

Male and Female	Average gross weekly earnings	Distribution of weekly earnings percentage earning under:

[2] Separate figures for the national park area are not available.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average gross weekly earnings as at April 1991 of male and female full-time employees by industry (sic 1980 class) in (a) Wales, (b) Gwynedd, Clwyd, Powys and Dyfed, (c) the administrative district of Snowdonia national park and (d) the district of Meirionnydd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The latest available information by industry—standard industrial classification classes—is published in part E of the new earnings survey 1990—tables 118-121—a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Because figures for Wales are derived from a sample of full-time employees, details for some industry classes are not sufficiently reliable for publication.

There are no reliable figures by industry class for the other areas of Wales requested but the average earnings of all make and all female full-time employees in April 1990 are, where available, given in the table:

Average gross weekly earnings:
Full-time employees on adult rates—pay unaffected by absence

Trawsfynydd Lake

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will identify the means and routes by which radioactivity has entered Trawsfynydd lake, giving comparable information for other bodies of water that are not directly connected with discharges from the Trawsfynydd nuclear power station, and account for the presence of natural radioactivity, past fall-out from Chernobyl and other nuclear-related incidents that have resulted in airborne radioactive matter entering Trawsfynydd lake; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will provide the results of any analysis undertaken by or reported to his office on the increased radiation dose, whole body and internal organs, received by the most exposed members of the public as a result of the water level of Trawsfynydd lake being lowered for investigation repairs to the dam serving to contain the waters of the lake; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will provide the level of radioactivity currently in situ in the sediments of lake Trawsfynydd, and the proportions of the overall radioactive inventory contributed by each principal radionuclide specie, stating how each radionuclide specie is distributed across the lake bottom and through the sediment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 28 June 1991]: The directorate of fisheries research of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food monitors regularly the levels of any radioactivity found in environmental materials taken from Lake Trawsfynydd. Measurements are also made in other lakes. The results are published in the annual reports of monitoring of radioactivity in surface and coastal waters of the British Isles. Copies of the report are available in the Library of the House.

The regular monitoring reports include analysis of the measurements in terms of both internal and external radiation doses. There is no evidence of any increase of dose to members of the public which is attributable to the lowering of the water level in the lake.

Radioactive nuclides are regularly monitored in Lake Trawsfynydd sediments and the results published in the annual reports. More detailed investigations into the radionuclide content of sediment profiles are currently being undertaken by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the results will be published.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration his Department has given to the radiological consequenced to individual members of the public of allowing the Trawsfynydd lake to be completely drained and/or abandons when the present nuclear power station located on its shores ceases to function; what conclusions he has reached in terms of the most exposed individual of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 28 June 1991]: When Trawsfynydd power station is to be decommissioned, full account will be taken of potential radiation exposure to members of the public from such operations. However, the presence of the recently refurbished Maentwrog hydroelectric power station will ensure the need to maintain the lake for many years to come.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the period for which the level of the lake was lowered in order to facilitate investigation and repairs to the dam containing the waters of Trawsfynydd lake, and state by how much, on average, the level of the lake was lowered and by what extent in area lake bottom sediments were exposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 28 June 1991]: I understand from Nuclear Electric that Trawsfynydd lake level was lowered in December 1986 from a nominal maximum of 650 ft above mean sea level—AMSL—to a nominal maximum of 642 ft AMSL to aid investigative work on the main dam structure. The level rose during early 1987 but was again reduced to 644 ft AMSL nominal maximum in May 1987 to relieve pressure on the dam structure until the new dam is completed, which is expected to be later this year.

When the lake's maximum level is lowered, areas of the lake shore which are normally covered by water, except during the summer months, are uncovered for longer periods. The size of these exposed areas varies from one part of the lake to another, depending on the slope of the shore at any point.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which organisation is to be responsible for maintaining Trawsfynydd lake at the desired levels and in good repair in future years; for how long the lake will have to be maintained full and in good repair if any undesirable radiation exposure to any member of the public is to be avoided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 28 June 1991]: Nuclear Electric owns the lake and is responsible for maintaining it at the required level. I understand that the primary purpose of the lake is to provide water for the Maentwrog hydro-electric scheme.

If at any time the draining of the lake is proposed, a full assessment of any potential radiological consequences will be made beforehand so that all necessary measures can be taken, including those required to ensure public safety.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if water run off from Trawsfynydd lake enters any source of potable water supplies.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 28 June 1991]: There are no licensed potable water abstractions from Trawsfynydd lake or the Afon Prysor into which it discharges. However, records are not kept of single abstractions of less than 5 cu m or of abstractions by adjoining land owners which are permitted without licence.

SCOTLAND

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reported cases of BSE there have been in each of the last six months; how many cattle have been killed; and from what number of farms in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information for Scotland for each of the last six available months is as follows:

	Number reported	Number slaughtered	Number of farms
December 1990	43	40	39
January 1991	76	72	65
February 1991	67	58	53
March 1991	73	59	59
April 1991	59	53	50
May 1991	48	30	28

The number of farms relates to animals slaughtered. Animals reported as suspected of being affected with the disease are normally held for a time for surveillance before slaughter. Final confirmation cannot be obtained until histopathological examination of brain tissues has been completed after death.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing expenditure on (a) hospital and community health services, (b) family health services and (c) total health service spending, identifying current and capital expenditure separately and adjusted for changes in input unit costs in each year from 1978-79 to the most recent available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 28 June 1991]: Details of gross expenditure for Scotland broken down by service from 1978-79 to 1989-90, in cash terms, and adjusted by the gross domestic product deflator, are given in the tables.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures he is taking to investigate (a) the uptake of family credit by the self-employed,

(b) the administration of the family credit scheme so far as self-employed claimants are involved and (c) the use of cash flow on the method of determining earnings.

Mr. Jack: There are around 47,000 families on family credit where the main earner is self-employed. Nearly 45 per cent. of them receive family credit of £50 or more a week. To improve further the service to self-employed customers, and to respond to the representations made by them and on their behalf, the Department has commissioned a research study into family credit for the self-employed from the social policy research unit at the university of York. The study is looking not only at the administration of the scheme and the method of determining earnings, but at a wide range of other matters including the nature of low income self-employment; incentives to work and job creation; eligibility and factors affecting take-up of family credit; and standards of living. The full report of the study is not due until 1993, but we hope to receive information on the assessment and administration elements before the end of this year.

Johnstone Benefits Office

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent in the Johnstone office of the Benefits Agency on (a) floor coverings, (b) furnishings and (c) fabric improvements in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure incurred by this Department since 1985 has been as follows:

	Floor coverings	Furnishings	Fabric improvements (internal redecoration)
1985-86	Nil	Nil	Nil
1986-87	Nil	Nil	Nil
1987-88	Nil	Nil	Nil
1988-89	Nil	Nil	9,200
1989-90	21,500	26,451	1,000
1990-91	Nil	12,021	Nil

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much has been spent on extending or improving the Johnstone office of the Benefits Agency in each year since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Information for the years prior to 1985-86 is not readily available.

The amounts spent by this Department on extending or improving the Johnstone office of the Benefits Agency in each of the financial years since 1985-86 are:

1985-86	1,821
1986-87	734
1987-88	3,501
1988-89	1,084
1989-90	48,998
1990-91	17,048

Notes:

1. Figures prior to April 1988 do not include any works projects over £2,500, which were the responsibility of the Department of the Environment.
2. These figures do not include the amounts spent on floor coverings, furnishings and fabric improvements.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the total population eligible to use the Johnstone office of the Benefits Agency in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many claimants were dealt with from the Johnstone office of the Benefits Agency in each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the effect of the Benefits Agency review on the operation of its office in Johnstone; what amendments to its operations have been made; what future proposals are intended for implementation; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: Statistics were obtained from the Strathclyde regional council to aid service planning and give the projected population of the Renfrew district, considered to be the most relevant.

In 1986 the actual figure was 203,220 with a projected change to 201,258, 200,805, 200,391, 200,008 and 199,644 in the years 1987 to 1991. The figures for 1985 are not available.

It is impossible to say how many customers are dealt with by any office of the Benefits Agency in any year. Contact can be made by post, by telephone or by visit and detailed figures are not held. The table, covering the main benefits, gives an indication of the numbers in contact with the Johnstone office over the period. Figures prior to 1987 are not available.

With the formation of the Benefits Agency, Paisley ILO and Johnstone ILO—previously separately managed independent units—were combined to form the Renfrew district. Currently at Johnstone are income support, liable relatives, direct payment, overpayments, social fund crisis loans and part of finance sections.

Future proposals are the responsibility of Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Benefits (Wales)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals were in receipt of (a) unemployment benefit, (b) income support and income support premiums, (c) family credit, (d) national insurance retirement pensions, (e) supplementary benefit, (f) child benefit and (g) one parent benefit; and what were the average payments made in (i) Wales, (ii) the administrative districts of Gwynedd, Clwyd, Powys and Dyfed, (iii) the administrative district of Snowdonia national park and (iv) the district of Meirionnydd during the past 12 months.

Miss Widdecombe: The complete answer to this question is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs. This is because such statistics are collected at DSS and unemployment benefit office level and areas covered by these offices do not correspond to the administrative districts specified. Furthermore, the information that is routinely collected does not reflect the number of individuals in receipt during particular periods, it merely provides a "snapshot" of a given point in time.

Such information as is available and relates to Wales follows:

(a) Unemployment Benefit; in May 1991, there were 28,610 individuals in receipt.
(b) Income Support and Income Support Premiums; in May 1989, there were 246,000 customers in receipt of whom 169,000 were in receipt of one or more premiums. The average payment was £34·83
(c) Family Credit; in November 1990, there were 21,300 persons in receipt. The average payment was £31·02.
(d) Retirement Pension; in April 1990 there were 518,000 in receipt.
(e) Supplementary Benefits; no customers in receipt of a weekly allowance
(f) Child Benefit; in 1989, there were 348,000 persons in receipt. The average weekly payment was £13·94.
(g) One Parent Benefit; in December 1989, there were 34,000 persons in receipt. The average weekly payment was £5·60.

Disability Benefit Regulations

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether any disability benefit regulations will be laid before the summer adjournment.

Mr. Scott: As the first step in a further consultation process on the new disability benefits I have today laid before the House draft regulations to provide for the new Disability Living Allowance Advisory Board. This new body will provide expert advice to staff working on disability living allowance and attendance allowance, which will remain for people disabled over age 65. The membership of the board will comprise people with disabilities and others with experience in the needs of disabled people and we will be inviting organisations of and for disabled people to make suggestions for its membership.

Over the next few weeks we shall also be issuing for comments the draft claim forms for disability living allowance and disability working allowance and the regulations which set out how the new benefits will operate in detail. We shall also be issuing the draft disability handbook which will assist the staff working on disability living allowance, and the draft regulations for the two benefits.

As part of this strategy of consulting disabled people about the administration of benefits we have conducted a survey of consumer views of the attendance allowance medical examination. The report of this survey, which shows a high level of satisfaction with the service provided by examining doctors will be published next week.

We have also laid before the House today a set of regulations to enable members of Her Majesty's forces to satisfy the residence test for severe disablement allowance.

Finally, we plan to lay regulations before the end of the parliamentary Session to introduce some beneficial changes to the industrial injuries provisions. We shall be extending the prescription for occupational asthma and adding two new diseases, orf and hydatidosis, to the schedule of prescribed diseases.

EMPLOYMENT

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on racial discrimination in employment.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are resolutely opposed to racial discrimination and sees fair treatment between citizens regardless of race as fundamental to a healthy and balanced society. Racial discrimination is morally wrong. Moreover, in employment it makes bad business sense by potentially excluding the best person for the job.

Progress has been made in eliminating racial discrimination. In that period from 1984 the unemployment rates for ethnic minorities came down faster than those for white people. There is also evidence that ethnic minority people have moved into higher level occupations over the past 20 years, and there has been a steady increase in the number of ethnic minority people taking up the challenge and opportunities of self-employment. However, more remains to be done to achieve equal opportunities in employment for these groups.

The Race Relations Act 1976, which applies to Great Britain, provides the legislative framework for the elimination of racial discrimination. The Commission for Racial Equality works to this end and has published a code of practice in employment.

The Department—through the employment service and training and enterprise councils—seeks to ensure equality of opportunity, irrespective of race, in all its programmes and services. In addition, the Department's race relations employment advisory service provides advice and guidance to employers on the introduction and implementation of policies and practices aimed at eliminating racial discrimination in employment.

Independent Unions Training Council

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will classify the Independent Unions Training Council as an appropriate body to approve training under paragraph 17 of the ACAS code of practice—time off for trade union duties and activities; and whether he has any plans to include the Independent Unions Training Council in paragraph 17 of subsequent editions of the code.

Mr. Forth: Paragraph 17 of the ACAS code of practice "Time Off for Trade Union Duties and Activities" consists of a restatement of statutory provisions contained in section 27 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978. It would, therefore, be inappropriate for ACAS to amend its code of practice in the manner suggested. The Government have no present plans to amend the relevant legislation.

Employment Training

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many adults with learning difficulties were undertaking employment training in each of the last five years; and how many are in training in the current year.

Mr. Jackson: While information is available about the overall number of trainees with disabilities entering employment training, information is not collected separately about those with learning difficulties.

Astra Training Services

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of whether Astra Training Services Ltd. has carried out all its statutory obligations and formal undertakings to trainees and employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: At the point of sale the Government met their undertakings to ensure that the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 applied to former civil servants who transferred to the private sector, including Astra and that pension arrangements were satisfactorily covered. Astra Training Services Ltd. is now a private company and it, and not the Government, is responsible for such statutory or other obligations that fall on it.

Food Industry

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of people employed in the food industry by county on the latest available date for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: The most recent estimates of employees in employment according to industry and by county are from the September1989 census of employment. Data for the food industries are given in the table.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the outcome of the meeting of the Labour and Social Affairs Council held in Luxembourg on 25 and 26 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Council had a useful and productive meeting. On the first day, the Council formally adopted its common position on the directive concerned with the health and safety of temporary workers and a directive to control the use of asbestos in the workplace.

Agreement was reached on an amendment to a regulation on social security arrangements for migrant workers; on a decision relating to the PETRA programme concerning vocational training exchanges for young people; on a directive concerning the provision of medical assistance on board ships; and on a decision on the European Year of Health and Safety.

Agreement in principle was also reached on a proposed directive on proof of employment relationships. Formal adoption was not possible since the European Parliament had failed to deliver its opinion in time for the Council.

A regulation to bring forward by one year to 31 December 1991 the full free movement of workers between Spain and Portugal and the rest of the Community was also adopted.

There was a protracted discussion, in which divergent views were expressed by a large number of member states, on one article of the proposed directive on the protection of pregnant women at work, but no agreement was reached. Almost all member states continue to have serious concerns on many aspects of the substance of this proposal.

Contrary to a number of inaccurate newspaper and broadcast reports, there was no discussion of the proposed directive on working time.

On the second day dealing with youth affairs, when my noble Friend Viscount Ullswater represented the United Kingdom, the Council agreed a decision on the Youth for Europe programme and a resolution on priority action in the field of youth.

Overall, the outcome of the proceedings demonstrated once again that the United Kingdom is far from isolated on even those proposals under the social action programme which cause us the most difficulty. Many member states are now experiencing difficulties and are working to keep important and sensitive areas of employment and social policy within the bounds of national law and practice. It is to be hoped that the Commission will take heed of these developments and concentrate its efforts on bringing forward proposals which will increase employment and reduce burdens on business.

The meeting also showed that the present treaty is perfectly adequate to enable sensible progress to be made in those areas where the Community has a proper role.

To date the Council has reached a decision on eight of the 19 social action programme measures so far submitted by the Commission.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Baltic States

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of attacks by units of the Soviet armed forces and Ministry of the Interior troops on targets in Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania in May and June; and if he will make representations to the Soviet authorities to withdraw all armed forces from the Baltic republics.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received several accounts of these attacks from our embassy and other sources. We have left the Soviet authorities in no doubt of our strong feelings about them. In the conclusions of its meeting at Luxembourg on 29 June, the European Council expressed its deep concern at the continued acts of intimidation and violence which had taken place in the Baltic states since the events in January, most recently in Vilnius on 26 June. The Council appealed for serious negotiations to be engaged between the Soviet authorities and the three Baltic states to find a solution which would fulfil the legitimate aspirations of the Baltic peoples.

Gibraltar

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to provide the Government of Gibraltar with all EC documents on which future directives or other legislation will be based; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: It is already our policy to provide Gibraltar with all EC documents relevant to Gibraltar's status within the Community.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Iraqi Refugees

8. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Iraqi refugees are presently living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Around 700 Iraqi nationals, including associated dependants, have been recognised as refugees in the United Kingdom since 1979. Corresponding information for earlier years is not available.

Immigration

14. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the Government's policies towards immigration.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The basic principles of the Government's immigration policy remain to maintain a firm and fair immigration control which restricts the numbers coming to work or settle here from outside the European Community.

Independent Television Franchises

15. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the outcome of applications for Channel 3 licences; and if he will make a statement.

25. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the outcome of applications for Channel 3 licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It will be the Independent Television Commission, and not my right hon. Friend, which announces the outcome of applications for Channel 3 licences. I understand that it hopes to make such an announcement no later than October this year.

Uniform Business Rate

16. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were jailed for non-payment of uniform business rate in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police Authorities (Yorkshire)

17. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will visit Yorkshire to discuss the funding of the police authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have no plans to visit Yorkshire to discuss police funding.

Youth Crime Prevention Panels

18. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many junior crime prevention panels have been set up in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of December 1990 there were 352 youth crime prevention panels in England and Wales, an increase of 91 over the previous 12 months.

Regional Television Companies

19. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the percentage of the profits of regional television companies which are taken in levy payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Based on figures supplied by the ITC, which is statutorily responsible for collecting the ITV levy, it is estimated that for the 1990 calendar year the levy payable by ITV companies, including TV-am, will amount to .52 per cent. of gross profits.

Guns

20. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate another review of the gun licence laws.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Firearms Consultative Committee is required to keep the Firearms Acts under review. If it thinks fit, it may make recommendations to my right hon. Friend for their amendment.

Dog Control

21. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he plans to take to ensure existing and future dog control legislation is enforced by the police.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have discussed the measures in the Dangerous Dogs Bill with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Metropolitan police, who support the action that the Government are taking to tackle the problem of dangerous dogs. We shall issue guidance to the police on enforcement of the legislation when it is enacted.

Identity Cards

22. Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent consideration he has given to the introduction of identity cards for the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In its report on practical police co-operation in the EC, the Home Affairs Committee recommended the introduction of a voluntary system of identity cards. In responding in January 1991, the Government said that the public demand for a voluntary identity card, and the benefits it would confer on the community, would not be commensurate with the high cost of developing and maintaining such a system. None the less, I shall continue to keep this question under review in the light of relevant developments.

West Midlands Serious Crime Squad

23. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to have prepared a report on the lessons to be learnt from the disbandment of the West Midlands serious crime squad.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A full investigation of the handling of cases by the former serious crime squad of the West Midlands police is being undertaken. It is for the Police Complaints Authority to decide whether matters that have come to its notice as a result of the investigation, should be made public or should be drawn to my right hon. Friend's attention by way of a report under section 97(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Police Federation

24. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will next meet the executive of the Police Federation to discuss recent rises in the level of crime.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend meets the executive of the Police Federation regularly to discuss a wide range of policing matters, including the level of crime.

Fire Services (Northolt and Greenford)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the appropriate level of firefighting facilities and staff in the Northolt and Greenford area; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals he has received for the reduction of the number of fire engines at Northolt fire station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is for the London fire and civil defence authority to assess the resources necessary to meet efficiently the fire risks in the Northolt and Greenford area. Any proposals to reduce the numbers of operational firefighters or firefighting appliances—and we have received none from the authority—would require my right hon. Friend's approval under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947. In deciding whether to grant it, we should want to be satisfied that the London fire and civil defence authority would continue to be able to meet the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover.

Sexual and Physical Violence

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how women victims of sexual and physical violence are encouraged to report the offence to the police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Police procedures and facilities for the reception and treatment of victims of physical and sexual violence have improved greatly in recent years. We believe that the increase in reported rape over the same period is in part attributable to changes in police practice in this respect. In the light of recent Home Office guidance, many forces are now taking practical steps to provide a better service to victims of domestic violence, with a view to encouraging more women to report such incidents to them.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines there are on how victims of sexual and physical abuse should be treated by the police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Home Office guidance to the police on the treatment of victims of rape and domestic violence was issued in 1986. A revised and expanded circular on domestic violence was produced in July 1990. Additional guidance for the police on the investigation of child sexual abuse will be issued in conjunction with the Department of Health's revised "Working Together" in the autumn. Copies of the current guidance are in the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how data on women victims of sexual and physical abuse are collected; and how it is made available.

Mr. John Patten: Statistics of recorded violent offences are collected by the police and published quarterly in a Home Office statistical bulletin and annually in Chapter 2 of "Criminal Statistics England and Wales". More detailed information on women victims of physical and sexual abuse is not collected on a regular basis but ad hoc analysis of police statistics, the British crime survey and other research studies classify offences by gender of victim. This information is made available either in ad hoc statistical bulletins such as Issue 29/80 "Violent Crime: Characteristics of victims and circumstances of recorded offences 1984", or in Home Office Research Studies such as "Personal Violence" HORS 89,"Changes in Rape Offences and Sentencing" HORS 105, "Concerns about Rape" Hors 106 and "Domestic Violence" HORS 107. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

Political Asylum

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of people seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom; and what further action he proposes to announce to control such immigration.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend made a statement on asylum on 2 July at columns 165-67.

Immigration (Caribbean)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Trinidad and Tobago, (b) Guyana, (c) Barbados and (c) Jamaica have (i) been admitted and (ii) refused admittance and removed each month during the period November 1990 to March 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is given in the table.

Citizens of Trinidad and Tobago, Guyana, Barbados and Jamaica admitted to, and refused leave to enter and removed from, the United Kingdom.

Thames Valley Police

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on future manning levels in the Thames Valley police force.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend announced on 20 December 1990 an additional 40 police posts for Thames Valley with effect from 1 October 1991.

The police authority has also made an application for an additional 132 police posts for 1992-93. My right hon. Friend hopes to make a decision before the end of the year.

May Inquiry

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects Sir John May to resume his inquiry into the conviction of innocent people for the Guildford and Woolwich bombings.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I understand that Sir John May will resume his inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the convictions of the Guildford and Woolwich defendants as soon as any proceedings against officers of the Surrey police force have been concluded. I further understand that Sir John intends holding further public hearings into the Maguire case in September.

Drug Initiative Teams

Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made on the establishment of drug initiative teams.

Mr. John Patten: Twelve local drugs prevention teams are in action under the Government's drugs prevention initiative, including one in Wolverhampton. Four further teams are in the process of being appointed or recruited. Discussions with local agencies in another four areas are taking place about the arrangements for setting up teams in those areas.

Broadcasting Regulation

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the BBC to discuss the regulation of the broadcasting industry.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend meets the Chairman of the BBC from time to time in order to discuss a wide range of broadcasting issues. The last occasion was in May.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Passes

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish a list of the several categories of Palace of Westminster pass, showing the capacities for which each category applies, together with (a) the number of such passes in issue at the latest convenient date and (b) the total number of such passes in issue at any time in the latest convenient annual period.

Mr. MacGregor: I am arranging for the information requested to be placed in the Library of the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Departmental Flowers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed as representing the House of Commons Commission, what is the annual cost of flowers supplied to the House; and which Departments of the House use them.

Mr. Beith: In the last financial year the Refreshment Department spent £8,997 on flowers for the areas under its control. Flowers are also supplied by arrangement with the Refreshment Department for private functions; but their cost is charged to the sponsoring Member's account.

I understand that the Parliamentary Works Office has responsibility for the supply of flowers to the Speaker's state rooms and other parts of the House, including the Terrace.

DEFENCE

The Gulf (Halons)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the volume of halons released to the atmosphere in the Gulf region during Operation Granby/Desert Storm as a result of the in-flight refuelling of military planes of the armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no evidence to suggest that any halon gases are released during the air-to-air refuelling of RAF aircraft.

Nuclear Deterrent

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account is taken of the size of the United States and Soviet Union's arsenals in setting the size of the United Kingdom nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom's nuclear deterrent is not based on any specific numerical correlation with the nuclear arsenals of others. Rather, it has long been United Kingdom policy to maintain only the minimum numbers of weapons necessary to deter aggression. In this respect the need to ensure that our nuclear deterrent remains effective against improving Soviet defences is of overriding importance when considering the size of our force.

Trigat

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's involvement in the Trigat programme and the committed cost incurred to date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom is a full member of the European collaborative group procuring the Trigat systems.

Expenditure to date has been £130 million.

Regiments

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, further to his answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 733, when his noble Friend will write regarding information on individual regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend wrote to the hon. Member today.

"Options for Change"

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he held with his NATO counterparts about the proposed reductions in the Royal Navy under the "Options for Change" process prior to 25 July 1990.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom's proposals for changes to its defence forces in response to the changing strategic environment in Europe, including the proposed reductions for the Royal Navy, were set out in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's statement on "Options for Change" last summer. These proposals were carefully considered in the light of international developments and the work under way to determine the alliance's new military posture. At the time of the announcement it was made clear that the United Kingdom's proposals would be subject to consultation with our NATO allies. In common with our allies, we have since engaged in formal consultations within the alliance and with our allies about our future plans.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy to publish a statement detailing the total anticipated effect of the" Options for Change" process on (a) the procurement budget and (b) the personnel budget.

Mr. Alan Clark: Estimates of expenditure in 1991-92 on equipment procurement and on personnel will be given in the annual defence White Paper, to be published on 9 July. It is not our policy to disclose details of our financial plans beyond the estimates year.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has held with companies involved in the manufacture of defence equipment concerning the formulation of Her Majesty's Government's policy "Options for Change"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 23 May 1991 at column 613 of the Official Report.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make his policy to publish a detailed statement on the strategic rationale underlying the "Options for Change" process.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This will be covered in the annual defence White Paper to be published on 9 July.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what offers he has received from trade associations representing manufacturers of equipment for defence to assist in the formulation of Her Majesty's Government's policy on "Options for Change"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Discussions between Ministers and trade associations are conducted on a confidential basis.

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for reducing his Department's headquarters under "Option for Change".

Mr. Tom King: As I made clear in my statement on 25 July 1990 on "Options for Change" my intention is to make substantial savings across the whole field of defence activities. This will involve both the armed forces and their civilian support and include the MOD headquarters which I have decided to restructure and slim down proportionately to the overall reductions.

I plan to achieve a smaller and more cohesive central headquarters, resulting in savings of about 20 per cent. in the uniformed and civilian top structure. Generally similar reductions will be carried through the organisation as a whole. The fall in numbers in the London element of the headquarters will be proportionately greater because in addition a substantial range of functions will be relocated and will merge with existing support establishments and commands elsewhere. On current expectations staff numbers in London are expected to fall from about 14,500 by some 7,000.

Overall under "Options for Change" the number of MOD civilian posts at home and abroad is currently expected to fall by about 20 per cent., the same proportion as the armed forces. About 20,000 posts will be saved in the United Kingdom and 15,000 abroad. This reduction will go forward at the same pace as in the armed forces overall.

Soviet Navy

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Soviet counterpart regarding the future programme of Soviet naval shipbuilding.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has not discussed the future programme of Soviet naval shipbuilding with his Soviet counterpart.

Nuclear-powered Submarines

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the programmed acceptance date for the first of class for a new generation of nuclear-powered submarines envisaged in Staff Target (Sea) 7027.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The first of class submarine envisaged in Staff Target (Sea) 7027 was expected to enter service by the end of the century. The precise date is classified.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure to date has been incurred on feasibility studies into an SSN20 class of submarine.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: To date expenditure of some £44 million has been incurred on the SSN20 feasibility studies. These studies have produced valuable information which will be of use for both the studies into a batch 2 Trafalgar class and for the programme to update the Swiftsure and Trafalgar class sonar capability.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he commissioned the first feasibility studies into the SSN20 class of nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Feasibility studies into an SSN20 class nuclear-powered submarine were approved in February 1986.

HMS Fearless and Intrepid

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what expenditure to date has been incurred on feasibility studies into (a) replacing HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid and (b) refurbishing HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Expenditure to date on feasibility studies into the replacement of the assault ships amounts to £4·14 million, and that into extending their lives to £161,000.

Sandown Class Minehunters

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which companies submitted tenders last year for the supply of Sandown class minehunters; and what was the total value of these tenders.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The four companies invited to tender for the supply of Sandown class minehunters were Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd., Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd., Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. and Swan Hunter Shipbuilders and Engineering Ltd. The tenders covered the supply of various numbers of ships up to a maximum of seven; the value of the tenders is commercially confidential.

Anti-air Warfare Frigate

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state when he expects to complete his studies of the design of a new anti-air warfare frigate to replace the type 42 destroyer.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 615.

Wing Commander Farquhar

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps have been taken to identify the person who removed documents and computer materials from the car left unattended by Wing Commander Farquhar in the circumstances which formed the basis of the recent court martial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The investigation of the theft of materials from the car is a matter for the Metropolitan police. I cannot comment further.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Women Prisoners

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken in response to the Women's National Commission report on women in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have already announced changes in certain areas covered by the report. For example, the number of statutory visits to which sentenced inmates are entitled was increased to two each month on 17 June, and we have also announced our intention to make cardphones available in prisons holding unconvicted prisoners. We shall be responding shortly to the Women's National Commission on other issues covered by the report, and will arrange for a copy of our reply to be placed in the Library.

Prisoners (Transfers)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the offence a person has been convicted of is taken into account when a decision is taken to transfer or not to transfer a prisoner between England and Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. The criteria governing such transfers, announced by the then Home Secretary my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) on 23 June 1989 at column 263, include a proviso that a request may be refused if it is considered that the prisoner's crimes were so serious as to render him or her undeserving of any degree of public sympathy or to make it inappropriate that the prisoner should benefit from a substantial reduction in time left to serve, if that would be a consequence of transfer.

Economic Migration

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contingency measures have been discussed or taken by him and his European colleagues with regard to possible substantial economic migration from the Soviet Union, the Balkans and Maghreb into the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. Friend regularly discusses immigration matters with his European Community colleagues and reports regularly to the House. Trends in migration are closely monitored and there are arrangements for rapid consultation should the need arise.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete a review of the circumstances regarding the conviction and execution of Derek Bentley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The case is still under consideration. The review will be completed as soon as possible.

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the names of the managing body of the UKIAS.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: UKIAS is a registered charity, controlled by a general council of representatives nominated by its member organisations. These member organisations consist of representative ethnic minority groups and other voluntary and statutory bodies. Responsibility for running the service is delegated to an executive committee elected by the general council. Full lists of member organisations and of the names of members of the general council and the executive committee are published each year in the organisation's annual report, the latest of which relates to 1989-90 and is available from the UKIAS head office, 190 Great Dover street, London SE1 4YB.

EMPLOYMENT

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places planned specifically for adults with learning difficulties were available in each of the last five years; and how many are available in the present year.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available.

Small Companies

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will detail the main measures for assisting small companies which have been announced in the last 12 months.

Mr. Forth: The main measures have included a number of VAT easements such as increasing the registration threshold to £35,000; increasing the corporation tax threshold by 25 per cent. to £250,000; sponsoring a one-day enterprise workshop for all training and enterprise councils; giving training and enterprise councils a wide measure of flexibility on how they administer the enterprise allowance scheme; extending the enterprise initiative for a further three years and introducing three specific programmes to help small firms innovate, solve technical problems and introduce modern manufacturing systems.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reported cases of BSE there have been in each of the past six months; how many cattle have been killed; and from what number of farms in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: The information for England and Wales is as follows:

Month	Number of suspect cases of BSE reported	Number slaughtered	Number of farms from which cattle slaughtered
December 1990	1,475	1,407	1,106
January 1991	2,242	2,144	1,660
February 1991	1,803	1,703	1,356
March 1991	2,210	2,071	1,649
April 1991	2,457	2,237	1,773
May 1991	1,936	981	824

Birds

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the number of imported wild-caught birds which were dead on arrival and which were subsequently submitted to the veterinary investigations centre for analysis to ascertain the cause of death from fowl pest, salmonella or psittacosis for each year since 1987.

Mr. Maclean: Data on the number of carcases of imported captive birds submitted to veterinary investigation centres for examination are set out in my reply of 26 June to the hon. Member for Glandford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley), Official Report, column 497. Such data do not, however, distinguish between wild-caught and captive-bred birds, nor do they differentiate between birds dying in transit or in quarantine.

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the number of different species of imported wild-caught birds which were confirmed as having died from fowl pest, salmonella or psittacosis in 1989.

Mr. Maclean: Information about the numbers of species of imported captive birds dying of specific causes is not collected in the precise form requested. Available data indicate that in 1989 at least 47 different species of imported birds were associated with salmonella infection, 11 species with Chlamydia psittaci infection, and at least 18 species died or were slaughtered as a result of fowl pest. It is not possible to differentiate between wild-caught and captive-bred birds.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Nursing Home Residents

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the number of new claimants of income support in residential and nursing homes each year since 1985;

(2) if he will estimate the number of residents in residential and nursing homes who have ceased to claim income support each year since 1985.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is held on the total number of income support recipients in residential care and nursing homes. It is not possible to distinguish between new and existing claimants, but the following table shows how total numbers have increased in each year since 1985.

	Number
December 1985	70,000
February 1986	90,000
May 1987	117,000
May 1988	147,000
May 1989	176,000
May 1990	189,000

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the number of residents in residential and nursing homes who will be in receipt of income support on 1 April 1993;

(2) on what basis he is estimating the cost of payments of income support to residents in residential and nursing homes from 1 April 1993.

Miss Widdecombe: Information about expected numbers of income support claimants as well as expenditure is published in the Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm 1014). It has never been the practice to make separate forecasts about any individual group within the planning totals.

PRIME MINISTER

National Identity Cards

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a further statement on the Government's policy towards issuing national identity cards to (a) immigrants and (b) all citizens.

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary informed the House on 10 February 1989, the Government are not persuaded that a compulsory national identity card scheme should be introduced.

In the Government's view the disadvantages of a policy of issuing national identity cards, notably the high financial cost, the risk of harming the relationship between police and public, and civil liberty objections, would outweigh its benefits.

Child Benefit

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will arrange for the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys to use the post code information held by the Benefits Agency to analyse child benefit to obtain and publish up-to-date information on the numbers of children in lone and two-parent households by area.

The Prime Minister: This information cannot be obtained using child benefit records, as post codes necessary to allocate claims to local authority areas are not available for some 2 million, out of 6·7 million, payees. The objective could be achieved by other means only at disproportionate cost.

Yugoslavia

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister whether the initiative taken by the three EC Foreign Ministers who visited Yugoslavia on peace-keeping missions was undertaken at the request of the Heads of Government meeting; whether the decision to send them was unanimous; what were their terms of reference; to whom they were to report back; and whether the agreed policy precluded individual Heads of Government from expressing separate national views.

The Prime Minister: I and my EC colleagues decided at the European Council in Luxembourg on 28 June to send the troika of EC Foreign Ministers to Belgrade and Zagreb to try to negotiate an agreement on the terms of a ceasefire which would allow negotiations between all the parties involved in the crisis in Yugoslavia. They reported back to us on the results of their mission on 29 June. The decision to send the troika was taken by consensus, as are all decisions in the field of foreign policy co-operation among the member states of the Community. The speed and unity of the Twelve's response reflected a convergence of national views on this subject. We shall, of course, continue to express our views bilaterally to the various Yugoslav parties.

Hot Pursuit

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on allowing police officers from other EC countries to enter the United Kingdom in hot pursuit of suspects.

The Prime Minister: There is currently no provision for police officers from other EC countries to enter the United Kingdom in pursuit of suspects.

UK-US Relations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on current United Kingdom relations with the United States of America in regard to (a) the future role of NATO, (b) the development of free trade and the GATT negotiations, (c) the strategic defence initiative, (d) the halting of nuclear weapons testing and (e) the future of Antarctica and the Antarctic treaty.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom and the United States are in full agreement with each other, and with the rest of the alliance, on NATO's future role as the cornerstone of European security. We are both committed to securing an open world trading system. We and the European Community are working closely with the United States in the GATT negotiations, which we all hope to conclude successfully by the end of the year.

Lone-Parent Families

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make arrangements for the Department of the Environment to arrange with the Benefits Agency the means of obtaining up-to-date information on the numbers of children in lone-parent households by local authority area for the purpose of assessing standard spending.

The Prime Minister: The standard spending assessments include indicators based on the most up-to-date information which is reliable at a local authority level on numbers of children and numbers of persons living in lone parent households. It is not possible to obtain more recent information by using child benefit records because the necessary post codes are not available for some 2 million out of 6·7 million, payees. An analysis of child benefit payments will not, in any case, indentify all lone parent households since some parents in receipt of income support do not claim one parent benefit as there is no financial incentive to do so.

Immigration and Frontier Controls

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister whether he will place in the Library the papers on immigration and frontier controls used during the Luxembourg summit and by his press officer subsequently to brief journalists.

The Prime Minister: I refer the honourable Gentleman to the statement I made in the House on 1 July, and the conclusions of the European Council which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Immigrants (Criminal Activity)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Prime Minister what research has been undertaken into the incidence among the immigrant population, relative to the non-immigrant population, of criminal activity, in particular (i) drug trafficking and (ii) terrorism, and of contribution to racial tension.

The Prime Minister: I am not aware of any research of these specific matters.

ENVIRONMENT

International Concert Hall, Manchester

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove of 27 June, if he will indicate from which budgets or vote subheads the funds made available for the International concert hall, Manchester, have come; and what plans he has for further funding.

Mr. Portillo: The funding so far approved for the concert hall, for feasibility studies, is from class VIII, vote 3, subhead D8 (Central Manchester Development Corporation). The Department will consider further funding on receipt of a full project submission from the development corporation.

Sewage Sludge

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to compel the water companies to add fragrances to sewage sludge disposed of on land.

Mr. Baldry: The Government have no plans to do so. A code of practice for agricultural use of sewage sludge was published in 1989 which contains guidance on effective odour control. Generally adequate treatment of the sludge or incorporation into the soil reduces any odour problems.

Local Government Review

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives to the Local Government Boundary Commission in respect of the release of advance copies of its reports on local government structure and boundaries (a) to the press and (b) local Members of Parliament in the areas covered by the review.

Mr. Key: None.

Aggregates

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to incorporate assumptions about increases in the cost of mining activities to reflect the increased value placed on countryside preservation in the preparation of future forecasts of national demand for primary aggregates.

Mr. Yeo: Before new guidelines for primary aggregate provision are published the environmental costs will be carefully considered. A number of studies are in progress which will assist this task.

Sheffield Development Corporation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment further to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 183, how many jobs have been created by the Sheffield development corporation since its inception, excluding jobs at the Meadowhall development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 4 June, column 166. I also wrote to the hon. Member on 17 June on this subject.

Local Government Boundary Commission

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the numbers of staff and annual costs of the Local Government Boundary Commission; the number of reports it issues each year; and the numbers and names of the reviews currently in progress.

Mr. Key: The commission has a staff of 36 and an annual running cost of approximately £770,000. In 1990-91 it issued 24 reports.

The commission is currently carrying out statutory reviews of the 36 metropolitan districts, the 32 London boroughs, the City of London and the Inner and Middle Temples. In addition, it is completing the statutory reviews of the non-metropolitan counties with a review of the Suffolk/Cambridgeshire boundary and a second review of part of the North Yorkshire/Cleveland boundary. It also considers reviews of parishes carried out by district councils as and when these are submitted.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the material studies and conclusions from the Local Government Boundary Commission's final recommendation for the county of Humberside will be referred to the new review of the structure of local government.

Mr. Key: Decisions on the steps to be taken following the commission's report will be made after the statutory period for public comment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the exact time and date when the Local Government Boundary Commission report was released (a) to the media, (b) to hon. Members and (c) to local authorities; and what advice he has given to the commission on releasing information to hon. Members to enable them to answer media questions.

Mr. Key: The timing of the release of its reports is a matter for the commission. I have given no advice to it on the subject.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the total cost of the Local Government Boundary Commission's review of Humberside and the separate costs of each stage of the review.

Mr. Key: It is not possible to separate the costs of an individual review from the total costs of the Local Government Boundary Commission.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new instructions he gave to the Local Government Boundary Commission following his statement of 23 April, Official Report, column 901, concerning his preference for unitary authorities in respect of the review of the county of Humberside.

Mr. Key: None.

Peat Bogs

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the sites of undisturbed raised peat bog in England, (b) the total hectarage of such sites, (c) the proportion designated sites of special scientific interest and (d) the proportion of those designated sites in the ownership of peat digging companies.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is to be included in the national peatlands resource inventory currently being researched by the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland. Further detailed research is to take place over the coming months. I will arrange for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library when it is published.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are being made under part II of the Environmental Protection Act for waste disposal authorities to divest themselves of their waste disposal operations; whether he foresees an increasing role for the private sector in waste disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Waste disposal authorities are currently developing plans under the Environmental Protection Act to divest themselves of their disposal operations.

At the time when public resources are under renewed pressure, it is vital that the private sector plays its full part. I shall now be making WDAs take action by issuing to them, where necessary, notices and directions to set up local authority waste disposal companies. LAWDCs are not the only way WDAs may divest themselves of their operations, but, if they wish to set them up, they must be viable. If not, WDAs will need to arrange for a joint venture or privatise their operations.

Moreover, I intend to seek information from WDAs about the capital investment requirements for the new waste disposal operations in their areas from 1992-93 onwards, and how much of these requirements could be financed outside public expenditure. Higher standards in waste disposal are likely to require higher levels of capital investment over the next few years. But the amounts available for public sector expenditure in this field are inevitably limited. This will mean that LAWDCs will normally have to have private sector involvement if they wish to carry out appropriate capital investment. I shall be consulting the local authority associations about the details. I shall also be looking at further measures in due course.

School Facilities

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provisions govern the consultations which local education authorities are obliged to undertake with governing bodies of schools over (a) use by outside organisations of unused portions of buildings which are otherwise in use as schools and (b) shared use of school facilities by outside organisations.

Mr. Fallon: Section 16 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 provides for the conduct of county, voluntary and maintained special schools to be under the direction of the governing body. Outside school hours, section 42 of the Act provides, in the case of county and maintained special schools, for the use of school premises to be under the control of the governing body, subject to any direction given by the local education authority. A similar provision for voluntary schools is contained in section 22 of the Education Act 1944.

Nuclear Structure Facility

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what alternative provision will be made to replace postgraduate access to the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury for degree purposes.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Postgraduate students will have access to the nuclear structure facility until its closure in 1992-93. The Science and Engineering Research Council is currently reviewing how research and training in nuclear structurer physics should be pursued beyond this period.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what will be the anticipated cost of redundancy as a result of the closure of the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury;

(2) what are the total estimated costs of the closure of the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The SERC's current estimate of the cost of decommissioning and dismantling the nuclear structure facility is £2 million. In addition, there will be the costs of some redundancies which will not be known until nearer the anticipated date of closure in 1992-93.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost of the manpower involved in constructing the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The element of manpower in the construction costs is not separately available and could be obtained by the Science and Engineering Research Council only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science between what dates the LINAC facility is planned to be used within the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No dates have been set by the Science and Engineering Research Council for the operation of the LINAC at its nuclear structure facility.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total cost at current prices of constructing the nuclear structure facility and its subsequent enhancements.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies that I gave him on 25 June 1991, Official Report, columns 39-40.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are SERC's plans for the linear accelerator at the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury laboratory in the light of the proposed closure of the laboratory.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I understand that no final decision has yet been taken by the SERC on the future of the LINAC accelerator.

LINC Report

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will put a copy of the "Language in the National Curriculum" report, the LINC report, in the Library;

(2) if he will give a breakdown of the cost of producing the LINC report.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave on 21 June 1991, Official Report, column 320, to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong). The precise cost of producing the LINC in-service training package is not separable from the Department's grant to be co-ordinator of the LINC programme. That is expected to be about £120,000, but it also covers costs involved in the central co-ordination of the training programme.

East Birmingham Task Force

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what visits or other official engagements were undertaken by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science during his visit to the East Birmingham task force area on 1 May.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The programme included a meeting with the task force team and visits to Just for Starters Ltd., Jona Sova Seba Committee, the Parkview access centre, St. Matthews school and Nechells and Duddeston youth centre.

HEALTH

Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of local government electors for Tower Hamlets for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number
1979	110,611
1980	111,447
1981	111,156
1982	112,073
1983	113,859
1984	112,256
1985	112,036
1986	113,203
1987	115,472
1988	113,671
1989	113,743
1990	112,550
1991	105,922

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of (a) men aged 65 years and over and (b) women aged 60 years and over for each year since 1979 in Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Dorrell: The estimates of resident population requested for Tower Hamlets are given in the table.

Thousands

Mid year	Men aged 65 and over	Women aged 60 and over
1979	9·0	17·3
1980	8·9	17·4
1981	8·8	17·1
1982	8·8	17·2
1983	8·5	17·1
1984	8·4	16·9
1985	8·5	16·8
1986	8·7	16·7
1987	8·8	16·5
1988	8·7	16·2
1989	8·7	15·9

NHS Trusts

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance he has issued to health authority trust funds about inappropriate investment;

(2) what information he has on the incidence of health authority trust funds investing in tobacco companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Trustee Investment Act 1961 gives the basic powers for investing in particular securities. We have not issued any specific guidance. Information about investment by health authority trust funds in any particular security is not held centrally.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have been closed in each year since 1974.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

RU486

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what trials the drug RU486 has undergone; and for how long a period.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Mifepristone (RU486) has been used by over 100,000 women worldwide and by more than 80,000 women in France.

Permission to perform clinical trials in the United Kingdom under the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Clinical Trials) Order 1981, S.I. No. 164, was granted in December 1986. These trials have been carried out in 15 centres, with approximately 1,500 women taking part.

Health Promotion

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the role of health visitors in health promotion and health education in the community and their role in providing advice to people in their own homes and in the context of their own lifestyles and family circumstances;

(2) what appropriate qualifications he supports for nurses undertaking health advice and health promotion work in the community.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 2 July 1991]: All health professionals have a responsibility to promote positive health in their work with patients and clients and their families and carers.

Health visitors are uniquely placed as a profession to make a significant contribution in health promotion and education and disease prevention. The Government's new strategy for health puts an even stronger emphasis on improving health. Health visitors provide advice systematically and opportunistically to people in their own homes as well as other places.

Nurses in possession of a health visitor or district nurse qualification are especially equipped with skills in health promotion and disease prevention. Other nurses who have been suitably educated and trained for their roles in the community are also able to fulfil these functions.

Health Visitors

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sponsored places for health visiting students there have been in each of the past 10 years; and what steps he is taking to ensure that health visiting training is adequately funded and that there is sufficient sponsorship of students.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 2 July 1991]: The number of sponsored places is not collected centrally. Details of the number of student health visitors and those entering training can however be found in "The NHS Workforce in England 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. It is for health authorities to determine their own manpower plans, including training needs. Regional health authorities have, however, been advised that post-registration professional training, including health visitor training, should, for the time being, be funded from a separate and protected regional budget, and they have been asked to identify current investment in such training.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 3 July 1991]: In his reply to a similar question from the right hon. Member, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister set out on 4 July at column 184 the aim underlying the policies of the Government towards people with disabilities.

In order to achieve the aim of enabling people with disabilities to take a full part in the life of the community, we are continuously reviewing and improving the provision of a broad spectrum of services for disabled people.

We agree with the authors of the manifesto that access to information is essential to enable people with disabilities to make reasoned choices.

In March I announced the establishment of the national disability information project, which has a budget of £3 million over three years, to fund pilot projects to identify good practice in the collection and dissemination of information at a local level to disabled people and their carers.

Guidance on the implementation of the community care reforms and the Children Act 1989, which will be implemented in October, draws attention to the need for service providers to produce information in formats which are appropriate for people with a sensory disability.

The Department grant-aids the production of Braille and has provided financial support for a variety of initiatives concerned with the development of sign languages and other communication techniques, including the production of information about the NHS reforms in Braille and sign language formats.

We agree that the prevention of disability and improved rehabilitation services are important goals. An advisory group on rehabilitation was set up earlier this year to advise on developments in NHS rehabilitation which would improve the range of services available to people with disabilities, and help them to lead as full a life as possible.

In May we announced a central initiative to improve rehabilitation services for people with brain injury. We will be supporting the development of a number of centres around the country which can act as models to the rest of the NHS, and carrying out an evaluation of the services they provide.

Between 1987-89, the Department contributed £800,000 towards a new rehabilitation centre for people who are deaf and blind with additional handicaps. In April 1990, the Department introduced new procedure for certifying people as blind or partially sighted.

In 1990, the Department launched two new initiatives under which it will make available nearly £3 million to the NHS for a cochlear implant programme and 12 pilot projects aimed at improving hearing aid services.

We will shortly publish the results of a review of continence services, including the recommendations for action to promote a good quality service throughout the country.

In June, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State made a statement at Mencap's annual conference on the future developments of services for people with learning disabilities. We have recently issued for consultation a draft local authority circular on social care for people with learning disabilities, and a parallel draft health circular on the role of the NHS in providing health care for this client group.

Considerable additional resources have already been committed to personal social services, including services for people with disabilities, where spending has increased by 53 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79.

When the new arrangements for community care are fully implemented in April 1993 local authorities will be required to assess the needs of people with disabilities and to provide the appropriate services that will best meet those needs. We make it clear in our guidance that users of the service and their carers should be involved as closely as possible in decisions about what services should be provided to them individually and that voluntary organisations representing users and carers be consulted in the preparation of community care plans.

One of the key objectives of the Government's proposals is to ensure that service providers make practical support for carers a high priority. The introduction of a complaints procedure open to all service users and their carers is a major step forward. It is part of the progress being made towards making services responsive to users' needs and it will encourage the drive for better quality services.

In addition, this year we are spending over £2,300,000 on grants to voluntary bodies in the disability field.

Internationally, the Government are actively participating in the European Community's HELIOS programme which aims to promote the integration into the community of both adults and children with disabilities.

We maintain an active role in the Council of Europe as members of the committee on rehabilitation.

We support the United Nations world programme of action concerning disabled persons and in particular the UN global project designed to mark the end of the UN decade of disabled persons 1983-92.

These major programmes, taken together with a range of other initiatives, illustrate the level of commitment to improving services for disabled people. We will continue to build on them in the future.

WALES

Urban Development Corporation

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the budget of each urban development corporation to cover the provision for training in each of the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: Cardiff Bay development corporation's expenditure on the provision of training was £17,300 in 1989-90 and £124,500 in 1990-91. The budget for training and social grants in 1991-92 is £399,000, of which it is estimated that £120,000 will be spent on training.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give details of the capital provided in the budget for all the urban development corporations for the provision of housing for the years 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. David Hunt: Cardiff Bay development corporation does not have a budget for the provision of housing. The value of land given to housing associations within the urban development area in 1989-90 and 1990-91 was:

1990-91	3,275,000

It is estimated that land valued at £66,000 will be donated for housing association use in 1991-92.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of houses provided by each of the urban development corporations for each year of operation to 31 March.

Mr. David Hunt: Cardiff Bay development corporation does not directly provide housing. The number of housing units built within the urban development area was:

	Units
1987-88	206
1988-89	198
1989-90	249
1990-91	115

The development corporation's strategy proposes 6,000 new homes, of which a quarter will be for social housing.

HIV

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have been diagnosed as HIV positive in each health authority in Wales for each of the past 36 months.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: For reasons of confidentiality and in line with the AIDS (Control) Act, numbers between one and nine inclusive are given as "less than 10". The figures requested are all less than 10.

Transit Itinerants Site, Gresford

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to require an environmental assessment regarding the transit itinerants site at Gresford.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under the terms of the Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environment Effects) Regulations 1988 environmental assessment is not required for gipsy sites.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many places planned specifically for adults with learning difficulties were available in Wales in each of the last five years; and how many are available in the present year.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not available.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospitals have been closed in each year since 1974.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism (Londonderry)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table to show for each year, or if more convenient financial year, since 1968 to the latest available date (a) the sums claimed for (i) criminal damage and (ii) criminal injury, resulting from terrorist activity in Londonderry city, and the sums paid in each such year, relating as far as possible the sums to the year in which the damage or injury was inflicted.

Dr. Mawhinney: Such information as is available is contained in the tables.

Rural Action Programmes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on rural action programmes which contribute to overcoming isolation and poverty.

Mr. Hanley: Given the rural nature of much of Northern Ireland most Departments and statutory agencies administer programmes which help to a greater or lesser degree in meeting social and economic need in rural areas.

A particular example is the community regeneration and improvement special programme, jointly funded by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland and the International Fund for Ireland, which provides assistance to community groups and district councils undertaking projects to achieve local economic regeneration in villages and smaller towns in areas of particular disadvantage.

In order to assist those local groups developing plans to tackle social and economic need in the most deprived rural areas of the Province, and to optimise the impact of the Government's social and economic programmes in the more remote areas, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State accepted recently the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee on Rural Development. He appointed me the Minister responsible and accordingly I am at present engaged in setting up a Rural Development Council outside Government to act as an advice and resource centre for rural community groups. An executive chairman has already been appointed. Within the Department of Agriculture a rural development division has been established which will support a small team of area co-ordinators to co-ordinate the local delivery of statutory programmes and services and to provide integrated statutory responses to local development plans.

It is hoped that these structures will be fully in place by the autumn of this year.

Toxic Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of, and levels of, any potential catalytic metals in the structure or in the containment drums for waste incinerated at the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: Such details are not yet available. If the proposed incinerator comes into operation the types of waste are likely to be organic chemicals and non-metal bearing. The drums are likely to be of carbon steel which presents no environmental risk.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies are available to him of technologies for the disposal of the types of toxic waste it is proposed to incinerate at the Maydown, Londonderry site.

Mr. Needham: The assessment of any proposal to incinerate waste would include the study of comparative and alternative facilities. Officials in the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland are, of course, aware of such studies in other parts of the world.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the specifications of the type of incinerator which is being proposed fo Maydown, Londonderry.

Mr. Needham: Such details will emerge only after the completion of the feasibilty study and could be made available only when a formal application is made by Du Pont (UK) Ltd.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Du Pont company on the possibility of shipping the toxic and hazardous wastes produced by the company in Northern Ireland to the Du Pont incinerator in the United States of America.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom Government are anxious to cease the export of waste out of their territory and there is a presumption in favour of national self-sufficiency in the provision of hazardous facilities.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with any companies about the construction of chemical or other plants in Northern Ireland which would produce the type of material the proposed incinerator at Maydown, Londonderry could burn; and what assessment he has made of the expected amount of such materials to be produced in Northern Ireland in the next four years.

Mr. Needham: None.

Further Education

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the document entitled "Further Education in Northern Ireland—The Road Ahead" launched on 25 June will be available in the Vote Office.

Dr. Mawhinney: This document was not required to be laid and was not, therefore, placed in the Vote Office. However, it has been available in the Library since 26 June. In addition, copies were sent on the day of publication to Northern Ireland Members of Parliament at their home addresses.

Student Grants

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the maximum level of grant aid available to students at third level education, pursuing degree courses, and staying in lodgings;

(2) what period of time is the student grant designed to cover.

Dr. Mawhinney: The maximum maintenance grant for a student living away from home during term time is £2,265: for those living in London this rises to £2,845. These rates of grant cover the normal period of 213 days —178 days in the case of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge—during which a student is expected to be in attendance at a course, together with the Christmas and Easter vactions. Tuition fees are also paid: the current year's amount is £1,675.

A student who is required to attend a course for longer than the normal period is eligible for a supplementary maintenance grant for each week or part week of the further period. For a student residing in the London area the weekly rate is £63·15: elsewhere in the United Kingdom it is £47·30.

TRANSPORT

British Rail

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to require the chairman of British Rail to publish the environmental impact study which was made on the line from Peckham via Brixton and Clapham to Waterloo.

Mr. Freeman: No environmental statement was necessary for the works at Waterloo and at Stewart's lane, which were authorised by the Channel Tunnel Act 1987. British Rail agreed with nearby residents to undertake measures to mitigate noise.

SCOTLAND

Schools

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of capital expenditure on schools in (a) each regional authority in Scotland and (b) Scotland in total, in each year since 1978-79, in constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information given in the following table has been compiled from local authority financial returns. The fall in expenditure in real terms during the period reflects a substantial and progressive decline in pupil numbers which has reduced the requirement for new school building.

Mental Illness Grant

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amount sought for the mental illness specific grant in 1991-92 by each regional and islands authority in Scotland and the amount actually paid out to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The amounts sought and grant offered are as follows:

Region	Amount sought £	Grant offered £
Borders	75,000	75,000
Central	105,000	92,372
Dumfries and Galloway	85,000	85,400

Shetland	39,900	39,900
Western Isles	50,000	50,000
Totals	2,171,139	1,944,257

Nothing has been paid out to date because the grant is payable three monthly in arrears.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospitals have been closed in each year since 1974.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally for the period 1974-1979. However, from 1979 to June 1991 51 hospitals have been closed in Scotland. During the same period, 74 major new hospitals have been opened.

Fife Social Work Department

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate when he expects to receive and publish the report by Sheriff Kearney into the social work department of Fife regional council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As I said in my reply of 23 April to the hon. Member, the chairman of the inquiry into child care policies in Fife has finished hearing evidence from the parties concerned and my right hon. Friend hopes to receive the report in the near future. As soon as he has the report he shall make a decision about publication.

Crofting

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will make a statement on the provision of housing assistance for fishermen through the crofting building grants and loans scheme.

Mr. Lang: The primary purpose of the crofting building grants and loans scheme (CBGLS) is to provide assistance to those who intend to live on and cultivate crofts, since crofting tenure does not allow the croft house to be used as security for a commercial loan. However, under the powers available through the Congested Districts (Scotland) Act 1897, the scheme has also been used to provide assistance to tenants of fishermen's holdings created in Lewis following the first world war and to fishermen feuars in the former crofting counties who have been able to demonstrate a secure title to a house site. In practice, however, only a relatively small proportion of loans and grants under the scheme have been made to applicants in these categories.

Over the years, the provision of special housing assistance to certain categories of fishermen through the scheme has become increasingly anomalous since the individuals do not face the same barriers as crofters in obtaining other forms of housing finance. In the light of these considerations and the announcement in April 1990 about the criteria for assistance under the scheme, I have decided that in future housing assistance will not be available to fishermen who do not otherwise qualify as crofters or to the occupants of the Lewis fishermen's holdings. However, to avoid any undue hardship those fishermen who at the date of this announcement have title to a house site and are currently eligible to apply will have a period of three years from the date of this announcement to bring forward an application for assistance.

All applications received during this period will be considered on their merits in the light of the existing eligibility criteria for the scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computer Misuse Act 1990

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the convictions under the Computer Misuse Act 1990.

Mr. Leigh: To date, there has been one conviction under the Computer Misuse Act 1990. The defendant was convicted of two offences under section 2 of the Act at Bow street magistrates court, London, and was sentenced to pay a fine of £450 for each offence.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to make an announcement on United Kingdom attendance at the forthcoming CSCE conference on the human dimension in Moscow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We plan to send a delegation to the Moscow CSCE conference on the human dimension, subject to developments in the Soviet Union between now and September. Participation in the conference would enable us to press for further improvements over those human rights issues which cause us concern.

Lockerbie

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will raise with the Government of Syria the alleged involvement of Syrian terrorists, before their arrest, in the Lockerbie plane bombing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has sought to raise with the Government of Libya the alleged involvement of Libyan nationals or residents in the Lockerbie bombing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The investigation into the Lockerbie disaster is being pursued by the Dumfries and Galloway constabulary, under the direction of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office stands ready to assist the constabulary in any way it requires in pursuit of international aspects of the investigation.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) who authorised the senior official of his office to make statements about the Lockerbie bomb link reported in The Sunday Times of 30 June;

(2) who authorised the spokesman from his office to make the statements on Libya attributed to that official on BBC radio and BBC television news on 28 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The line taken by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office spokesmen in response to media inquiries has consistently been that they cannot comment on a continuing police investigation.

United Nations Secretary-General

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which members of the Government met the United Nations Secretary-General on his visit to the United Kingdom on 30 June; and what was discussed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I called on the Secretary-General on 29 June and discussed subjects of current international interest including the situation in Iraq.

Expo 92

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer on 28 June, Official Report, column 568, if he will make it his policy to include in the overall exhibition theme at the British pavilion at Expo 92 in Seville the appropriate use of Gibraltarian expertise and appropriate exhibits from Gibraltar.

Mr. Garel-Jones: As I have made clear in previous answers our policy is to select exhibits for the British pavilion at Expo 92 on the basis of their relevance to the theme "Original Britain" rather than their place of origin.

DEFENCE

Injured Grenadiers

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many witnesses were called by the board of inquiry investigating the Grenadier accident at Batus, Canada on 7 July 1989, to give evidence as to the proper execution of safety procedures and of safety briefings to Grenadier Guardsmen Adrian Hicks, John Ray and Sean Povey.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. The board of inquiry was able to reach conclusions based on written evidence without conducting interviews.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, at the proposed meeting between his Department and the legal representatives of the injured guardsmen, he will make it his policy to disclose the full content of the board of inquiry report and to accede to a request to reopen the board of inquiry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not the practice to release the proceedings of boards of inquiry to outside parties, but officials will, of course, make every effort to answer any questions about the circumstances of the accident at Batus that the solicitors representing the three Guardsmen may put. If a request is made at the meeting to re-open the board of inquiry we shall consider this on its merits and in the light of other means of obtaining any necessary information.

Infantry, Northern Ireland

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a further statement on his plans to deploy additional infantry battalions to Northern Ireland;

(2) what restraint is placed by current Army manning levels on his ability to provide extra infantry battalions for deployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army's commitments in Northern Ireland are accorded the highest priority. Force levels in Northern Ireland are kept under constant review and will continue to be adjusted as and when it is judged necessary to do so.

The Gulf

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what approximate proportion of Tornado strikes against enemy airfields in the Gulf war were made by GR1 aircraft linked to Buccaneers equipped to Pavespike laser designators; what proportion were made after thermal imaging airborne laser designator equipment became available; and which of these two systems achieved the best overall results in the targeting of Paveway II bombs.

Mr. Alan Clark: About 40 per cent. of Tornado GR1 and Buccaneer attacks against Iraqi airfields used the Pavespike designation system to target laser-guided bombs, and nearly 30 per cent. used TIALD. The performance of the two targeting systems is still being evaluated.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use was made in the Gulf by RAF Tornados of the air-launched anti-radar missile and thermal imaging airborne laser designator pods; and if he has completed his evaluation of their effectiveness.

Mr. Alan Clark: Some RAF Tornado GR1s were equipped with ALARM missiles which had been brought into service several months early. Two TIALD pods were diverted from the current development programme to be used in the Gulf. We are continuing to study all aspects of the Gulf campaign.

Regional Office, Bristol

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for constructing new regional office premises for sections of his Department in the Bristol area; over what period construction will take place; at what estimated cost; and if he will make a statement on the reason for this development.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: MOD's only current proposal for new office development in the Bristol area is that for procurement executive staff, announced on 27 March 1990. In view of the local planning difficulties that have arisen over our proposals for Keynsham, which have delayed the project by a year, we have recently completed a review of possible alternative locations in the Bristol area and elsewhere; the results are now being assessed.

Service Personnel (Injuries)

Mr. Miscampbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to take out insurance cover by his Department against the risk of injury while on service duties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid) on 27 June at column 550 of the Official Report. The extent to which current arrangements are satisfactory is under review.

Regiments (Recruitment)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the regiments whose potential recruiting was reduced by his policy of recruitment capping in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Recruiting was not capped in 1988-89 or in 1989-90. In 1990-91, the recruit intake was limited to 16,000. In consequence, recruit allocations to all arms and services throughout the Army were reduced.

Z-Berths

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the criteria for designating a Z-berth; what provisions for civilian safety and evacuation exist at Z-berth sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Individual Z-berths are designated on the basis of operational and safety considerations. Safety arrangements include a public safety scheme, prepared after discussion with the local authorities and civil emergency services, which sets out detailed arrangements for the site in question.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those countries whose vessels are currently permitted to visit United Kingdom Z-berth sites and (b) what vessels are currently permitted to visit United Kingdom Z-berth sites; what visits he envisages in the future to Holy Loch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Nuclear powered warships from the United States and French navies in addition to the Royal Navy may be permitted to visit United Kingdom Z-berths. No specific visits to the Holy Loch are planned following the withdrawal of the US facilities there, although occasional future visits by nuclear powered submarines are possible.

International Military Services

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the export activities of International Military Services within Iraq.

Mr. Alan Clark: International Military Services has at all times complied with Government policy and export licence regulations in conducting business in Iraq as elsewhere.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultation or contact he has had with W. S. Atkins and Partners or any people associated with W. S. Atkins and Partners regarding the future of International Military Services.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information his Department has about the engagement of employees of International Military Services on defence-related projects or contracts in Iraq after May 1988;

(2) what information his Department has about the engagement of employees of W. S. Atkins and Partners on defence-related construction projects in Iraq after May 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not our normal practice to comment on the activities of employees of particular firms, except where there is evidence that Government policy has been breached.

Defence Arms Control Unit

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work is currently being undertaken by the defence arms control unit.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [holding answer 4 July 1991]: The defence arms control unit is currently engaged in a wide range of arms control activity, including assisting in the development of United Kingdom and NATO positions on the future of conventional arms control in Europe and negotiations on a chemical weapons convention, and in preparations for the forthcoming biological weapons convention review conference.

Written Answers to Questions

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Terms

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to change the number of weeks children spend in school.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to alter existing arrangements which provide that schools—nursery classes and schools excepted—must meet for 380 half-day sessions in each school year.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will arrange for the examining boards to reschedule examinations so that children spend more of the summer term in school.

Mr. Eggar: The GCSE and GCE examination timetables are a matter for the examining bodies concerned. However, my right hon. and learned Friend has recently discussed the matter of the GCSE examination timetable with representatives of the joint council for the GCSE, and we understand that the timetable is likely to start a week later in 1992 than it did this year.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much of the school term remains unexpired after GCSE and A-level examinations have been completed: and what plans he has to ensure that the time is fully utilised.

Mr. Eggar: The dates of school terms are determined locally, while the dates of GCSE and GCE examinations vary according to both the examination boards' timetables and to the subjects taken by individual pupils.

If pupils attending school after taking external examinations are not involved in courses required under the national curriculum, this time could with advantage be used constructively, for instance to secure careeers guidance or to gain work experience.

As announced in the White Paper "Training and Education for the 21st Century"—Cmnd. 1536—the Government intend to legislate to abolish the present Easter and May school-leaving dates in favour of a single date at the end of the summer term.

Examination Standards

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what independent facilities exist to monitor examination standards since the inception of each current examination.

Mr. Eggar: The School Examinations and Assessment Council is responsible for approving all GCSE and GCE syllabuses and examinations as suitable to be offered in schools. In addition to the examining bodies' own extensive scrutiny arrangements, both SEAC and Her Majesty's inspectorate scrutinise the conduct of these examinations to ensure that standards remain appropriate and consistent between subjects and examining bodies and from year to year.

Nursery Education

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the provision of each London borough for nursery education for each year since 1979 giving (a) the number of nursery schools and (b) the number of nursery classes with pupil numbers and participation rates.

Mr. Eggar: Tables detailing nursery provision in the maintained sector in each London borough for the period 1980 to 1990, the latest date for which information is available, are being placed in the Library. Information for 1979 and separate participation rates for nursery schools and nursery classes are not readily available.

Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of children aged 16 to 18 years in Tower Hamlets remained in full-time education for each year since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The proportion of young people in Tower Hamlets aged 16 and 17 at the start of the academic year who were in full-time education—excluding those attending independent and special schools—was 44 per cent. in 1989-90. Data are not available for earlier years, because Tower Hamlets is part of the Inner London education authority and data were collected only for ILEA in total.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number and percentages of full-time students in Tower Hamlets by (a) primary school, (b) secondary school, (c) sixth-form centre, (d) sixth-form college, (e) colleges and polytechnics, (f) universities and (g) other educational establishments for each year since 1979.

Mr. Fallon: The numbers and percentages of pupils and students domiciled in Tower Hamlets who were in full-time education in the maintained sector in England in 1989-90 are given in the table. Information on people from Tower Hamlets attending independent schools and colleges or universities is not available. Figures for earlier years were collected from the Inner London education authority and cannot be disaggregated to borough level.

Establishment	Full-time pupils and students	Percentage
(a) Primary schools	17,254	57
(b) Secondary schools	10,486	35
(c) Sixth-form centres	—	—
(d) Sixth-form colleges	—	—
(e) Colleges and polytechnics	1,752	6
(g) Other educational establishments	895	3
Total	30,387	100

Teacher Vacancies

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his most recent assessment of teacher vacancies in London listed by education authorities for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Fallon: The most recent figures available relate to January 1990, details of which are being placed in the Library. Vacancy figures for individual authorities for January 1991 have not yet been finalised and will be placed in the Library when confirmed.

Examining Boards

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the extent of his powers vis-à-vis examining boards.

Mr. Eggar: The GCSE examining groups and GCE examining boards are independent bodies, but all courses of study leading to qualifications for pupils of compulsory school age are subject to the Secretary of State's approval, and their associated syllabuses are subject to the approval of his nominated body, the School Examinations and Assessment Council. As announced in the White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century" the Government intend to use their reserve powers to extend these controls on standards to courses for 16 to 18-year-olds.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications for early retirement with enhancement have been approved and the costs met in part or in full by the teachers' superannuation fund in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Fallon: During the year ending 31 March 1991, a total of 781 teachers aged 50 to 64 were awarded benefits under the teachers' superannuation regulations following premature retirement from educational establishments in Wales.

Enhancement is a matter for employers, who are asked but not obliged to report details to the Department. Enhancement was reported in 560 cases, no enhancement was reported in 157 cases, and 64 cases were not reported.

Environmental Education

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has taken any action based on proposals made in the report of the business meeting on environmental education to which he referred in his answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 27 June, column 533.

Mr. Fallon: The report in question makes no specific proposals for action by the Department. It will, however, be brought to the attention of the committee which is being established to advise on the future development of environmental education within further and higher education.

ENERGY

Electricity Generation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration is being given to resolving the regulatory problems faced by on-site generators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Regulatory issues are a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply. I have however agreed to meet some members of the Combined Heat and Power Association to hear of their problems and ideas at first hand.

Coal Industry Pay

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, (1) what was the average wage from each area of the United Kingdom coal industry for (a) coalface-trained miners, (b) miners employed elsewhere underground and (c) surface workers in 1990-91;

(2) what was the average incentive and bonus pay in 1990-91 in each United Kingdom colliery;

(3) what was the average earnings for the year 1990-91 in each area of the United Kingdom coalfield.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Detailed information on average earnings, incentives and bonus pay is not kept by my Department. However, the two-year pay and benefits agreement introduced by British Coal in January this year puts mineworkers near the top of the industrial earnings league.

Fissile Material

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, whether, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith), Official Report, 27 June, column 516, any nuclear material originally created in un-safeguarded reactors has been notified to the safeguards authorities as open to safeguards under INFCIRC-263.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: There have been occasions when material originating from non-safeguarded reactors have been brought into safeguards. Such material has been notified to the safeguards authorities under INFCIRC 263.

Plutonium Exports

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, Official Report, 27 June, column 517, there have been any exports of plutonium to the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic in quantities of less than a few grammes in the past two years.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I cannot for reasons of commercial confidentiality disclose the precise amounts of plutonium exported to individual countries. However, total exports of plutonium to the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic and its predecessors over the last two years have not exceeded 1 gramme.

IAEA Safeguards Budget

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment has been made of the increased demands on the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards budget of the decision by the Republic of South Africa to sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: This question will be considered as part of the agency's budgetary process.

PRIME MINISTER

Local Government Finance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister why he decided to require local authorities when setting their poll tax levels to cover the cost of unpaid poll tax bills; and if he has any plans to change this requirement.

The Prime Minister: As part of its budgetary process and in line with proper accounting practice, every local authority has to estimate the level of non-recoverable charges for the forthcoming year and then set a community charge which takes this into account. In this respect, the community charge is no different from the old domestic rating system.

Government Bills

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on recouping losses arising from the non-payment of Government bills from the subsequent payers of such bills.

The Prime Minister: Departments are advised in "Government Accounting", the Treasury's guide on accounting and financial procedures for Government Departments, that all reasonable action should be taken to effect recovery of losses.

Health Care Corporation Ltd.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister what legal costs have been contributed by Her Majesty's Government either directly or indirectly towards the legal costs of either party in the case of Regina v. Elmridge Borough Council, ex parte Health Care Corporation Ltd. and another.

The Prime Minister: In civil cases the costs are a matter for the parties involved. There has been no Government involvement in this case.

Holy Loch

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 17 June, Official Report, column 9, if he will make public those parts of the agreement between the United Kingdom and United States Governments to establish the United States Navy base at Holy Loch in 1960 which pertain to (a) civilian safety in the area; (b) the local community and (c) the local economy; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 17 June.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Part III Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) whether residents of formal local authority part III homes, which are transferred to the private or voluntary sector between 25 June and when amending regulations regarding entitlement to income support take effect, will be eligible for higher levels of income support;

(2) whether residents of former local authority part III homes which were transferred to the private or voluntary sector before 25 June are eligible for higher levels of income support;

(3) whether residents of former local authority part III homes which are closed down are eligible for higher levels of income support.

Miss Widdecombe: Eligibility for income support is defined by regulations. Decisions regarding claims to benefit are made at a local level by independent adjudication officers who are provided with guidance on the interpretation of the regulations by the chief adjudication officer in the published adjudication officers' guide, a copy of which is in the Library.

The chief adjudication officer has recently issued advice to adjudication officers to help them decide claims from residents of homes which are transferred from local authority ownership to the private or voluntary sector pending the amendment of the regulations.

Where a local authority has accommodated a person under part III of the National Assistance Act 1948, responsibility for that person continues unless he no longer requires that accommodation. If a local authority home is closed the local authority would be under an obligation to find and pay for alternative accommodation for the residents.

Child Benefit

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policies on child benefit.

Mr. Jack: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has confirmed on a number of occasions recently, child benefit is and will remain a strong element in the Government's policies for family support. Child benefit rose by £1 a week for the eldest eligible child in each family in April, and will rise by a further £1 a week for the eldest eligible child in each family in October, with an extra 25p a week for other children. As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer said in his Budget statement, the Government are committed to increasing the new rates of child benefit in line with the movement in the retail prices index each year, starting in April 1992. We will announce in the uprating statement the allocation of the individual amounts between the eldest eligible child and other children.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Firearms Certificates

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many certificates were valid in the Metropolitan police area for (a) firearms and (b) shotguns by division for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available by division, but for the whole of the Metropolitan police area it is as follows:

Certificates on issue at 31 December each year

	Firearms	Shotguns
1979	9,504	[1]—
1980	9,374	28,990
1981	8,981	29,528
1982	8,856	28,504
1983	8,741	29,747
1984	8,878	30,293
1985	8,957	[2]37,147
1986	9,084	41,814
1987	9,036	44,299
1988	8,877	45,835
1989	8,615	43,436
1990	[2]9,929	42,362

Notes

[1] Figures for shotgun certificates on issue on 31 December 1979 are not available.

[2] Computerisation of records of shotgun certificates in 1985 and firearm certificates in 1990 brought to light previous under-recording.

Emergency Planning

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 168, if he will make a statement on the progress of the review of guidance to local authorities on emergency planning procedures.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. David Brook, the civil emergencies adviser, is preparing guidance on preparing for and responding to peacetime disasters. This guidance will be based on the lessons learnt from recent disasters and the experiences of those involved. It will complement the emergency procedures manuals prepared by the emergency services. The guidance will not be issued until all those agencies upon whose responsibilities it touches, including local authorities, have been consulted about its contents. This process is currently under way.

Home Office guidance aimed solely at local authorities, currently contained in the "Emergency Planning Guide to Local Authorities", will be revised in the light of the outcome of the review of emergency planning announced on 16 October at column 769.

Jury System Reform

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has plans to bring forward proposals for reform of the jury system.

Mr. John Patten: We do not rule out further reform of the jury system, but there are no present plans for legislation.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will bar telephones in his Department from connection to premium rate services.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: All office telephones in the headquarters buildings of the Department have a bar to restrict access to premium rate services. The same bar is being progressively introduced to the provincial offices and into prison establishments.

Prevention of Terrorism Act

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his replies to the hon. Member for Bow and Poplar (Ms. Gordon), Official Report, 24 June, column 355, on terrorism in Northern Ireland, if he will set out the reasons why the information requested is not available; and if he will make it his policy to ensure such information is made available in future.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is not available because police forces do not in general make information from custody records available to anyone but the suspect or his or her legal representative. However, a forthcoming study by the Home Office research and planning unit is likely to show that out of the 214 suspects who were detained in England and Wales between 22 March 1989 and 11 November 1990 under the Prevention of Terrorism Act in connection with Northern Ireland terrorism, 95—45 per cent.—requested notification under section 56 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, and notification was delayed for over 36 hours in six cases; and that 103—48 per cent.—requested access to legal advice under section 58 of the Act, which advice was delayed for over 36 hours in eight cases. Legal advice was delayed for the full 48 hours permitted by the Act in only one case. There were no cases in which notification under section 56 was delayed for 48 hours.

Mr. King Obe Quoi

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to answer the letters of 23 February, 28 April and 17 May from the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley, regarding Mr. King Obe Quoi and his family; what are the reasons for the delay in providing a reply; what is the usual time taken by his Department to reply to a Member about an urgent constituency case; what action he is taking to deal with such cases with greater expedition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 4 July. The delay in replying is a direct result of the tenfold increase in the number of applications for asylum being received by the asylum division since 1988 and the heavy workload of subsequent inquiries from applicants and hon. Members which has been generated. The Home Office would normally expect to provide hon. Members with a reply within 16 days. However, exceptional difficulties prevail in the asylum division. On 26 April my right hon. Friend announced our intention to increase the number of staff in the asylum division from about 120 to more than 500. This process has begun and should in due course improve the division's ability to respond more quickly to hon. Members' inquiries.

Migration

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in each of the last 25 years, or for as many years as he has information, (a) emigrated from Britain and (b) immigrated to Britain; and for each year what was the net position.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available data on migration to and from the United Kingdom are the estimates produced by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys from the international passenger survey. This defines a migrant as a person leaving one country where he/she has been resident for more than a year with the intention of residing in a new country for a year or more. These data include British citizens and are on a different basis from the figures of people subject to immigration control accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom. Data for 1964-89 are given in table 2.1 of the 1974, 1979 and 1989 issues of the OPCS publication "International Migration", copies of which are in the Library. Corresponding data for the 12 months ending 30 September 1990 are given in the table.

Migration to and from the United Kingdom in the 12 months ending 30 September 1990

Number of persons, in thousands[1]

	Inflow	Outflow	Net inflow
All citizenships	257	219	37
British citizens	107	132	−25
Non-British citizens	150	88	62

[1] Figures are provisional estimates, and have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

Underground Facility, Drakelow

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has for the use of the underground facility at Drakelow in Wyre Forest; and what is the annual cost of maintaining this facility.

Mr. John Patten: The facility has been developed as an administrative centre for use in a possible emergency. Running costs for 1990-91 were £122,000.

Criminal Records

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to have completed the process of the computerisation of the national collection of criminal records; and whether from that time it will be possible centrally to vet applications from individuals seeking to become licensed taxi drivers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The police national computer holds information on the convictions of those whose first reportable offence occurred after 31 December 1980. This information is available on-line to police forces. Plans to computerise earlier records which are held on microfiche at the national identification bureau, New Scotland Yard, have not yet been finalised. Records of convictions for other offences are held by police forces.

Criminal records have recently been the subject of a scrutiny which examined arrangements for, and the scope of, a fully computerised national criminal records system and the use of such a system for the purposes of vetting. The scrutiny recommendations are currently being considered and no decisions have been made on a national criminal record system or the purposes for which it may be used.

EC Frontier Controls

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 215, to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan), if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Schengen agreement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have nothing to add to the earlier answer to which the hon. Member refers in the question.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

IAEA Publications

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the "Inventory of radioactive material entering the marine environment: Sea disposal of radioactive waste", document IAEA-TECDOC-588, published by the International Atomic Energy Agency in March.

Mr. Curry: We already have one.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the total number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy by county or region, in England, Scotland and Wales for the period 1 January to 30 June.

Mr. Gummer: The information, calculated by date of confirmation of disease, for the period 1 January to 30 June 1991, is as follows:

Country, region and county	Confirmed number of cases

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the pesticide active ingredients for which the agro-chemical companies are not submitting data for review, giving the year of their initial approval; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Agro-chemical companies have, so far, taken commercial decisions not to submit data for review in respect of 20 pesticide active ingredients:

Active ingredient	Date of first approval
Aluminium Silicate	1969
Anthraquinone	1962
Barban	1980
Benzethonium Chloride	Pre 1986
Carbophenothion	1966
Chlorthiamid	1962
2, 4-DES	1968
Di-allate	1978
Ditalimfos	1974
Fenchlorphos	1975
Fenoprop	1965
Flamprop-methyl	1980
Fluoroacetamide	1980
Mevinphos	1980
Oxine Copper	1961
Quinonamid	Pre 1979
2, 4, 5-T	1962
Tar acids	1970
Thionazin	1981
Thiourea	1983

Approval for the advertisement, sale, supply, storage and use by the approval holders—and their agents—of pesticides based on these active ingredients was revoked on 1 March 1991. Since no safety concerns relating to approved uses of these pesticides have been identified, approval for up to two years has been given to allow stocks already on the market to be used or disposed of safely.

Where necessary, action will be taken to revoke approvals for any products where reasonable steps are not taken to support continuing use.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now make a further statement in respect of his assessment of the current nuclear weapons potential of Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is clear that, prior to the Gulf conflict, Iraq was trying to develop a nuclear weapons programme. United Nations Security Council resolution 687 required Iraq to submit to the United Nations and the International Atomic Energy Agency details of its nuclear weapons usable material.

Iraq made two initial declarations, which gave some of the information required, but were deficient in some respects. The IAEA, with the special commission set up in accordance with resolution 687, is working to verify these statements and to remove nuclear weapons usable material from Iraq.

Kuwait (British Citizens)

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by the United Kingdom representative at the United Nations to ensure that compensation is paid to British civilians who were in Kuwait at the time of the Iraqi invasion; and when he expects the first payments to be made.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom representative at the United Nations is working actively with other members of the United Nations Security Council on arrangements for establishing a United Nations compensation commission and fund as envisaged in UNSCR 687 and UNSCR 692. The governing council of the commission is to be based in Geneva. It is not yet possible to indicate when the first payments will be made.

Kurdistan

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), Official Report, 24 June, column 349, on allied forces in Iraq, if he will seek to obtain the information requested.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Parliamentary Answers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to supply a reason to Members on each occasion his Department is unable to provide a substantive answer to future questions.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: It is already our policy to do so.

Lebanon

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to promote the implementation of United Nations resolution 425 concerning the withdrawal from southern Lebanon of the occupying Israeli army, following the recent activity of the Lebanese army in re-establishing government control in and around Sidon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We strongly support the efforts of the Lebanese army to impose their control. Their success further strengthens international calls, which we have consistently supported, for Israel to withdraw from Lebanon in accordance with UNSCR 425. It is most important that neither the Israeli defence forces, nor their surrogates, do anything to impede the Lebanese army.

Information Services

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 350, how he determines whether the market information inquiry service and the overseas status report service are being run at a profit or loss.

Mr. Garel-Jones: Provisional estimates of the cost of supplying the range of charged information services to exporters suggest that these services are heavily subsidised at present. Work is currently in hand to identify the costs involved in the Department of Trade and Industry in the United Kingdom and in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office overseas in providing individual services. Our aim, in the longer term, is for our pricing structure to evolve to a position where charges and costs are aligned as far as possible, consistent with continuing to provide a high quality service to serious United Kingdom exporters that they regard as good value for money.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 627, if he has any plans to propose legislation under which the bodies acting as recognised supervisory bodies will be required to publish the number of complaints which they receive against their members.

Mr. Redwood: I have no plans for such legislation. Under the Companies Act 1989, a recognised supervisory body must have effective arrangements for the investigation of companies against persons who are eligible under the body's rules to be appointed company auditor.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose legislation under which auditing firms could be required to explain audit failures to representatives of shareholders and creditors.

Mr. Redwood: No. Shareholders can already seek explanations of audit work at AGMs, and if they are unhappy can change the auditor. A company already has means of legal redress against negligent auditors.

EC-EFTA Negotiations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the expected timetable for the completion of the EC negotiations with the European Free Trade Association.

Mr. Sainsbury: The European Council on 29 June endorsed the Community's commitment to work with EFTA to try and complete the negotiations on the European economic area this month, with the objective of enabling the agreement to enter into force on 1 January 1993.

ICI

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to pay an official visit to the ICI factories at Pontypool, Penrhyndeudraeth and Barry.

Mr. Lilley: I have no present plans to visit these factories.

Egypt

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the hon. Member for Uxbridge concerning unfair competition in trade with Egypt resulting from subsidies provided by the United States of America via its bilateral aid programme; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has received representations about alleged unfair competition from the United States of America in connection with a business contract in Egypt. We are looking into these allegations as a matter of urgency and I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the Insolvency Service has now achieved a full realisation of the cash and estate accounting records up to 31 March.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 4 July 1991]: No. The Insolvency Service now estimates that work on the cash and estate accounting records to 31 March 1991 will be completed by end of July 1991. However, flowing from the problems outlined by the Comptroller and Auditor-General in his report on the insolvency services account for 1989-90 relating to the old accounting systems and the transfer of estate records to the new system, a full reconciliation may not be achievable. I have asked the inspector general and chief executive of the Insolvency Service, who is the agency accounting officer for the account, to let the hon. Member have a further report at end-July. In the meantime, the inspector general is advising the Comptroller and Auditor-General of the position. The new system is succeeding in eliminating many of the problems apparent in the old.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what is the average penalty imposed in the cases taken by the Insolvency Service; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 5 July 1991]: The Department of Trade and Industry prosecutes a variety of offences following investigations by the Insolvency Service. Such prosecutions comprise offences for which, on conviction, both custodial and non-custodial sentences are imposed. It is therefore not possible to calculate an average penalty.

Every decision to prosecute is taken with legal advice and the lawyer will have regard to the code for Crown prosecutors issued by the Director of Public Prosecutions under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985. That code, in addition to providing criteria as to the sufficiency of evidence, contains criteria concerning whether the public interest requires a prosecution. One of the criteria is the likely penalty, and it is stated that the prosecutor should carefully consider how best the public interest would be served where a nominal penalty is likely.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last reviewed the code for Crown prosecutors regarding the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 5 July 1991]: Any revision of the code for Crown prosecutors is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions under section 10 of The Prosecution of Offences Act 1985.

The Insolvency Service has guidelines which, when read with the code for Crown prosecutors, gives more detailed guidance regarding the investigation of possible offences in insolvencies. These guidelines were reviewed by Ministers in June 1991.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the annual cost of the Insolvency Service in Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Official receivers' offices located in Yorkshire are at Leeds and Sheffield. The running cost budgets for this financial year 1991-92 for those offices are £884,000 and £468,000 respectively.

The official receiver, Hull, and the official receiver, Stockton, also have responsibility in parts of Yorkshire. The running cost budgets for 1991-92 for those offices are £454,000 and £312,000 respectively.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when it was decided to propose legislation to obtain additional tax from building societies for the financial year 1985-86; and when and how an estimate was published of the financial effect on total tax receipts and on the tax to be paid by societies;

(2) what was the best estimate of the revenue effect at the time it was decided to propose legislation to obtain additional tax from building societies for the financial year 1985-86.

Mr. Maples: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given to him on 15 April, at columns 9-10, and 22 April, at columns 300-1. The 1986 legislation changing the way building societies account for tax on interest and dividends paid did not involve additional tax.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table of Inland Revenue statistics for each year since 1985, showing the schedule for composite rate tax on building society interest for each year since 1980-81.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 5 July 1991]: The information requested is shown in the table:

Public Expenditure

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish indices of Welsh, Scottish and United Kingdom planned total spending, excluding privatisation receipts and the reserve, since 1978-79, with 1978-79 = 100.

Mr. Mellor: Indices for identifiable planning total expenditure—excluding privatisation proceeds—in Wales, Scotland and the United Kingdom for the years 1985-86 to 1989-90 are set out in the table. The figures for the United Kingdom are based on the part of the planning total—about three quarters—which could be allocated to individual territories. The data on which the indices are based reflect the planning total outturn at the time when the data were collected for the 1990 territorial analysis of expenditure. Corresponding data for 1984-85 on a consistent basis could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Data for other years are not available.

1989-90	133·4	127·5	127·6

Horse Racing

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to prevent British companies making large investments in horse racing and bloodstock from writing down this investment to zero in one year for tax purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: It is not clear what sort of investment my hon. Friend has in mind. However, if he can provide further details I shall be glad to consider his question again.

Customs and Excise

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into Her Majesty's Customs and Excise since its reorganisation on next steps lines; and give a breakdown by grade of the number of staff taking up each new working pattern.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs and Excise have for some time used a variety of alternative working patterns, in particular part-time working, job sharing and fixed-term appointments, and will continue to do so following its reorganisation into executive units. I regret that detailed information on numbers and grades can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil service grade 6 officers there were in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Figures for the number of civil servants by grade from 1984 to 1990 can be found in table 4 of "Civil Service Statistics". Copies of this publication are held in the Library. Figures for 1991 are not yet available.

Unified grade 6 was created on 1 January 1984 as part of an expanded open structure by the assimilation of the senior principle grade and some equivalent grades. Published figures for the period prior to that date refer only to senior principal and since since 1984 further grades have been assimilated to UG6. Figures for UG6 on a consistent basis could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bar telephones in his Department from connection to premium rate services.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Telephones in my Department are already barred from connection to premium rate services.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the liquidation of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

Mr. Maples: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral statement I made earlier today.

Tax Assessments

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much assessed tax on income in 1989-90 had been assessed by 31 July 1990.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 5 July 1991]: The amount of tax assessed on income in 1989-90 by 31 July 1990 cannot be ascertained, as the Inland Revenue keeps records by reference to the collector's accounting year ending in October.

P11D Forms

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many P11D forms were outstanding on the most recent date for which this information is available.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 5 July 1991]: There were 1·15 million P11D forms on hand on 13 June 1991. The bulk of these forms are received in the first part of the tax year and dealt with in a targeted programme finishing in December.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Horn of Africa

41. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent progress has been made in ensuring aid arrives at the destination where needed in the Horn of Africa with the minimum of delay.

Mrs. Chalker: The established relief routes in northern Ethiopia continue to deliver food to those in need. In northern Sudan the relief routes are operational. Problems persist over the provision of food to southern Sudan and to those parts of Ethiopia still affected by conflict. However, new mechanisms, including air drops, are being introduced to deal with pockets of acute need.

European Community Aid Policy

42. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average percentage of gross domestic product spent on overseas aid in other EC member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Figures are available only for those member countries of the European Community which are also members of the development assistance committee of the OECD. The overall average percentage of gross national product given in overseas aid by these seven countries, excluding the United Kingdom, was 0·56 per cent. in 1989.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what facilities exist to discuss overseas aid with EC counterparts; and what proposals are envisaged for the development of a single EC policy on aid.

Mrs. Chalker: I have regular meetings with my EC colleagues on all aspects of aid policy. I have just returned from an informal Development Council which met in the Netherlands over the weekend. A wide range of issues was discussed.

Animal Conservation Schemes

44. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what animal conservation schemes are currently under consideration for financing by his Department.

Mrs. Chalker: Several possible projects are under consideration, in which animal conservation will be an important element. They include the following:

Bangladesh: study of impact of flood control on aquatic ecology.
Bhutan: management Plan for Jigme Dorji wildlife sanctuary.
Brazil: conservation of flooded forest areas.
India: wetlands conservation in Manipur valley.
Indonesia: conservation adviser.
Nigeria: development of Gashaka Gumpti game reserve.

Zimbabwe

45. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects were discussed during the Minister for Overseas Development's visit to Zimbabwe.

Mrs. Chalker: I had separate meetings with His Excellency the President and a number of his senior Ministers. The subjects we covered included arrangements for the forthcoming Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting to be held in Harare, Zimbabwe's economic reform programme, our bilateral aid and other matters of mutual concern and interest to our two Governments.

"Farewell to the Third World"

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response his Department has made to the report by the export group for the construction industries "Farewell to the Third World", a copy of which has been sent to the Minister for Overseas Development.

Mrs. Chalker: Our response to the Export Group for the Construction Industries referred to the clear statement of ODA's strategy in the 1991 departmental report to Parliament (Cm. 1502), the importance of supporting economic reform in many developing countries, the good record of British contractors in gaining business from bilateral and multilateral aid, and the continued real-terms growth in the aid programme.

Nicaragua

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what bilateral aid Her Majesty's Government have given to Nicaragua since President Violetta Chamorro took office.

Mr. Chalker: We started a bilateral technical co-operation programme in March 1990; this is now running at about £200,000 a year. We subsequently pledged £600,000 of grant aid as part of the international effort to help restore the Nicaraguan economy. Since Mrs. Chamorro took office we have made commitments totalling £260,033 for six new NGO projects in Nicaragua. Our largest financial contribution continues to be through the British share of European Community assistance to Nicaragua; there are no figures yet available on this for 1990.

The Gulf (Medical Aid)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what United Kingdom medical aid is being given to Kuwait and Southern Iraq.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave on 17 June at column 32. We are keeping the situation under close review.

Bangladesh

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the grants made by Her Majesty's Government to Bangladesh through the Bangladesh aid consortium since 1972 was devoted to programmes designed (a) to protect coastal areas from cyclone damage and (b) to prevent flooding within Bangladesh.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 5 July 1991]: The Bangladesh aid group is a forum for discussion of Bangladesh's development policies and financing requirements, at which donors indicate their aid intentions. It is not a mechanism for channelling aid, which is provided on a bilateral basis.

British aid statistics do not separately identify the amounts spent over past years on cyclone or flood protection. Since the 1989 Bangladesh flood conference we have committed £4·5 million towards the cost of studies identified as part of the flood action plan. Under that plan work on cyclone protection is also being undertaken with finance from the European Community.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

31. Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to meet the director of the Serious Fraud Office to discuss company crime; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I shall next meet the director very soon, when we shall of course discuss commercial fraud among any other matters of departmental interest.

WALES

Health Provision

13. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the health authorities in Wales to discuss health provision in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I met health authority chairmen on 31 January and hope to do so again in the autumn.

14. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will next be meeting the chairmen of the health authorities to discuss the future of the health service in west Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend hopes to do so in the autumn.

Employment Statistics

15. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the change in the level of unemployment during the year to May 1991 in (a) Neath and (b) Wales as a whole.

Mr. David Hunt: The number of unemployed claimants in the Neath constituency and Wales increased by 731 and 29,043 respectively in the year to May 1991.

16. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state the number of unemployed males and females in May 1989 and 1990 in Ogmore, Mid Glamorgan and the present recorded number.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is as follows:

	Ogmore constituency	Mid Glamorgan	[1]South Wales
May 1989
Male	2,045	15,406	47,679
Female	656	4,992	16,150
May 1990
Male	1,801	13,952	41,929
Female	497	3,784	11,964
May 1991
Male	2,533	19,620	59,019
Female	621	4,788	14,630

[1] South Wales is defined here as Mid, South and West Glamorgan and Gwent.

18. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many men and how many women, showing full and part-time separately, were in employment in January 1979 and the latest date for which figures are available, in Wales and Mid Glamorgan.

Mr. David Hunt: Employees in employment data below national level is available only in census of employment years. The following table therefore shows data for June 1978—the nearest to January 1979—and the latest available—September 1989—containing both Mid Glamorgan and Wales:

Thousands

	Mid Glamorgan	Wales
June 1978
Male full-time	106·6	587·9
Male part-time	3·3	25·3
Female full-time	48·8	249·6
Female part-time	27·5	152·5
September 1989
Male full-time	79·8	484·5
Male part-time	4·1	37·2
Female full-time	44·7	255·2
Female part-time	36·4	209·8

Inward Investment

17. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the proportion of inward investment projects attracted to the United Kingdom which have resulted in jobs created in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Wales continues to attract very significant levels of inward investment from overseas. The recent announcement that Sony was to create 1,400 jobs at a new manufacturing facility at Bridgend and Northern Telecom etc. is further evidence that Wales is now one of the most attractive locations in Europe for internationally mobile investment.

Secondary Schools

19. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent per pupil in secondary schools in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79, at constant prices.

Sir Wyn Roberts: In 1989-90 current expenditure per pupil in secondary schools in Wales was £1,817. The equivalent constant price figure for 1978-79 was £1,243.

Heart Disease

20. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on progress in combating coronary heart disease in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: In May 1991 the Department published comprehensive and authoritative advice to the NHS in Wales entitled "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Cardiovascular Diseases" which has been well received.

In addition, the Heartbeat Wales programme, which is run by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales, continues to combat the high incidence of coronary heart disease in Wales. The authority has distributed advice to GPs and other health professionals on the management of blood cholesterol levels and is organising seminars to outline cholesterol guidelines. Preliminary evaluation of the first five years of the Heartbeat Wales programme shows encouraging trends with smoking and excess drinking decreasing and more people in Wales taking exercise.

Residential Care Homes

21. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether residents in private nursing homes in Wales are eligible for free NHS services including chiropody and physiotherapy.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Under the Registered Homes Act 1984, the person responsible for a private nursing home is required to provide adequate support services such as physiotherapy. Consequently, health authorities would not normally provide such services to patients in such homes.

The Government's policy on chiropody is that treatment should be available under the NHS, free to all who need it. However, it is for the individual health authority to decide the level of provision required in its area and detailed priorities within available resources.

Local Government Reform

22. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales from which organisations he has received representations so far concerning local government reform in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received written or oral representations from the Assembly of Welsh Counties, the Council of Welsh Districts, the Wales Association of Community and Town Councils, members of the Conservative party, Plaid Cymru, and the Liberal Democrat party, a number of individual local authorities and councillors. I have also received a large number of letters from members of the public.

European Co-operation

23. Sir Anthony Meyer: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet the authorities in Baden-Württemburg, Rhône-Alpes, Catalonia and Lombardy during the coming six months to discuss economic co-operation.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department and the Welsh Development Agency are actively pursuing practical links with all these regions. I have already visited Rhone-Alpes and plan to visit Baden-Württemberg later this year. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State has visited Lombardy and plans to visit Catalonia later this year.

Employment Initiatives

24. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new initiatives he plans to announce to help the unemployed.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment recently announced a substantial package of additional measures to help unemployed people back into work. This includes expert advice and help in looking for a job, extra training and a new work experience programme—employment action. This new package, together with the wide range of programmes already in place, amounts to the most comprehensive range of measures we have ever had to help unemployed people back to work.

A5 (Dualling)

25. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the proposed dualling of the A5 across Ynys Môn.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Following the public consultation exercise last October we expect to make an early announcement of the preferred route for the dualling of the A5 across Ynys Môn. The preferred route for the Holyhead improvement was announced last November and design work is proceeding with ground investigation and topographical surveys due to begin shortly. The A5 schemes are included in the Roads in Wales programme.

Engineering Qualifications

26. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people currently training for a British national technical engineering qualification (a) in Mid Glamorgan and (b) in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There were 505 students enrolled on Business and Technician Education Council engineering courses at higher education level in Mid Glamorgan in 1989-90, the last year for which figures are available. The corresponding figure for Wales was 2,516. At further education level the number of students enrolled was 558 for Mid Glamorgan and 3,497 for Wales.

Royal Welch Fusiliers

27. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the future of the Royal Welch Fusiliers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received 188 written representations and a petition containing 35 signatures calling for the continuation of the Royal Welch Fusiliers in their present form. I have also received a number of personal representations.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bar telephones in his Department from connection to premium rate services.

Mr. David Hunt: Yes. It is my Department's practice to do so where it is technically feasible.

Dioxins and Furans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the maximum permissible levels and monitored levels of (a) tetrachlorodibenzofuran, (b) tetrachlorodibenzodioxin, (c) pentachlorodibenzodioxin, (d) pentachlorodibenzofuran, (e) heptachlorodibenzofuran and (f) octachlorodibenzodioxin, respectively, in parts per million found in the Pontypool area; and what information he has regarding the risks of dioxins and furans to human health.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: We have engaged the services of the university of East Anglia to undertake an in-depth survey to establish the levels of contamination by PCBs and their degradation products, dibenzo-dioxins and furans, in the Panteg area of Pontypool. The results of that survey will be available in about 18 months and will be widely published on completion.

We have also appointed Professor Lewis Roberts (former Wolfson professor of environmental risk assessment at the university of East Anglia) as our independent adviser for the survey. His role will be to advise us on the methodology and conduct of the survey and, at a later stage, to provide us with advice on its implications.

We have available to us pollution paper No. 17, "Dioxins in the Environment", which is a report of an interdepartmental working group on dioxins and furans. The conclusion of the working group is that a number of adverse health effects have been noted following accidental and occupational exposure to these chemicals, most commonly chloracne. The committee noted that no deaths had been attributed to these chemicals.

The Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) has not found any convincing evidence of a link between exposure to these chemicals and cancer, but recommend a continuing review of the work being undertaken in this field.

Redundant Miners (Training)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the number of redundant British coal miners who have received training or retraining following redundancy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government do not identify separately the number of redundant miners who have received training or retraining on Government training programmes. However, since it was set up in 1984 British Coal Enterprise has helped over 500 redundant miners to receive training and helped to create nearly 9,000 job opportunities in Wales.

SCOTLAND

Appointees

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the annual cost of reimbursements and fees to each of his appointees to agencies, commissions and boards for each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Table 1 shows the annual remuneration at 1 July 1990 to my appointees in paid appointments. Table 2 provides the same information in respect of appointments made jointly with other Ministers. Information for previous years could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" published each year since 1982 and available in the Library, lists the public bodies to which appointments are made, including the remuneration paid.

Information on expenses paid to members of such bodies is not held centrally.

Enterprise Budgets

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the alterations made to the budgets of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise since the publication of "Meeting Scotland's Needs"; and what directions were given about the spending of those additional sums.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The alterations made to the budgets of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise which are subsequent to the determination of the figures published in "Serving Scotland's Needs"—Cm 1515—are set out in the tables.

Scottish Enterprise

Amount of adjustment (£ million)	Date announced	Activities supported[1]
+ 9·1	2 February 1991	Enterprise Environment Employment Training Youth Training
+13·6	26 February 1991	Employment Training
+15·0	10 May 1991	Industrial and Environmental Renewal in Lanarkshire
+10·1	19 June 1991	Employment Training Employment Action
+47·8[2]

[1] No formal directions were given to Scottish Enterprise regarding the additional sums, which were however allocated in support of the functions listed.

[2] The total gross budget of Scottish Enterprise for 1991-92 is now £454·748 million.

Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Amount of adjustment (£ million)	Date announced	Activities supported[1]
+ 0·4	—[2]	Enterprise
+ 1·75	8 February 1991	Employment Training Youth Training Enterprise Training Administration
+ 1·4	26 February 1991	Employment Training
+ 0·6	19 June 1991	Employment Training Employment Action
+ 4·15[3]

[1] No formal directions were given to Highlands and Islands Enterprise regarding the additional sums, which were however allocated in support of the functions listed.

[2] Amounts allocated to Highlands and Islands Enterprise in respect of Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance and Agricultural Development Programme following publication of Serving Scotland's Needs.

[3] The total gross budget of Highlands and Islands Enterprise for 1991-92 is now £74·878 million.

NHS Management

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the study commissioned by the Scottish management executive into the perception of health service staff on the contribution made by general management to the running of the national health service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The management executive is charged with improving the performance of the NHS in Scotland in serving patients. This task is informed by users' and staffs' perceptions of the service. No formal reports exist.

GP Budget-holding Practices

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the management fee for the pilot scheme, general practitioner budget-holding practices, of size (a) 3,000 to 6,000 and (b) 6,000 to 8,000.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The same administrative tasks are undertaken by all practices involved in fund holding, regardless of their list size. The standard management allowance will therefore be available to those practices that participate in the smaller list size pilot scheme. The standard management allowance currently stands at £16,500 during the preparatory period and £33,000 per annum when fund holding commences.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bar telephones in his Department from connection to premium rate services.

Mr. Lang: The vast majority of telephones in my Department are at present barred from connection to premium rate services. There are some telephones, however, which are connected to equipment which is not technically capable of individual call barring at present.

AIDS

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the membership and terms of reference of the AIDS task force for Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am pleased to announce that the following persons have agreed to serve on the task force, which I shall chair:

Dr. G. E. Bath—Consultant in Public Health Medicine and AIDS Co-ordinator, Lothian Health Board.
Dr. J. S. Berkeley—Consultant in Public Health Medicine and AIDS Co-ordinator, Grampian Health Board.
Mr. J. Chant—Director of Social Work, Lothian Region Council.
Mr. J. Christie—Deputy Director of Education, Tayside Regional Council.
Professor F. Edwards, Director of Social Work, Strathclyde Regional Council.
Dr. L. Gruer—Consultant in Public Health Medicine and AIDS Co-ordinator, Greater Glasgow Health Board.
Dr. D. H. Kennedy—Consultant Physician, Greater Glasgow Health Board.
Mr. A. M. Macpherson—Scottish Advisory Committee, National AIDS Trust.
Mrs. M. Moore—Director, Scottish AIDS Monitor.
Dr. K. A. M. Porter-Boveri—Consultant in Public Health Medicine and AIDS Co-ordinator, Tayside Health Board.
Dr. J. R. Robertson—General Medical Practitioner, Muirhouse Medical Group, Edinburgh.
Mrs. J. Roulston—Projects Manager, The Aberlour Child Care Trust.
Dr. A. Tannahill—General Manager, Health Education Board for Scotland.
Miss A. Thomson—Clinical Nurse Specialist, Greater Glasgow Health Board.

The terms of reference of the task force are as follows:

In the light of existing and emerging data on the incidence of HIV and AIDS in Scotland:
—to review current activities to prevent the spread of the virus;
—to consider what further practical measures might be taken; and
—to access the effectiveness of the present arrangements for co-ordination of action at national and local level.

I am confident that the task force, which will meet for the first time on 19 July, will make a significant contribution to our efforts to tackle the problem of HIV and AIDS in Scotland.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when, following the recent completion of the review into environmentally sensitive areas, he expects to be in a position to announce further designations of environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 5 July 1991]: My right hon. Friend's first priority has been to consult on proposals for development of existing environmentally sensitive areas designated in 1987 and to evaluate those designated in 1988. He hopes to build on their achievements. There are no plans, currently, to designate new environmentally sensitive areas in Scotland. However, the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland and the Countryside Commission for Scotland have been asked for advice on priorities should further designations be decided in the future.

Salmon Farming

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Scottish salmon farming industry is on the agenda at the forthcoming meeting of the Fisheries Council of the European Commission on 8 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 5 July 1991]: The Scottish salmon farming industry is not on the formal agenda for the Fisheries Council next week. However, United Kingdom Ministers will certainly be raising our concerns with the Commission and other Fisheries Ministers at that time.

Training (Employment Contracts)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many youth training and employment training people had contracts of employment in December 1990 in Scotland; and how this was calculated.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 5 July]: I regret that this information is not available.

ENVIRONMENT

Minister for London

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received seeking the appointment of a Minister for London within the Department.

Mr. Heseltine: Several.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will use the information collected in the 1991 census in his calculations to determine standard spending assessments for local authorities in the financial year 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Information from the 1991 census will be incorporated into standard spending assessments (SSAs) as soon as possible, allowing for proper consultation and discussion with local authority representatives. Information for individual local authorities will not be available until the summer of 1992.

Greenwich Borough Council (Finance)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the London borough of Greenwich about the calculation of the council's standard spending assessment; and what reply he has given.

Mr. Key: The London borough of Greenwich has made a number of representations on its standard spending assessment and has on a number of occasions discussed these matters with local government Ministers. All the issues raised have received most careful consideration.

Lone Parent Households

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how dated is the information for each local authority on the proportion of children in lone parent households used in assessing standard spending.

Mr. Key: The most up-to-date information, which is consistent and reliable at local authority level, is used throughout standard spending assessments. In the case of the proportion of children in lone parent households this is information from the 1981 census.

London Boroughs (Loan Debt)

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the loan debt for each London borough for each year since 1979.

Mr. Key: The outstanding loan debt for each London borough for 1983-84 to 1989-90 is given in the table. The figures relate to outstanding loan debt as at the end of each financial year. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Outstanding loan debt for London boroughs: 1983-84 to 1989-90

Community Charge

Sir William Shelton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provisions govern the number of monthly instalments in which a local council may request their community charge must be paid.

Mr. Portillo: Our regulations provide that the charge is payable in 10 monthly instalments or, if less, the number of whole months remaining after the issue of the notice, less one. However, these regulations have recently been amended so that when a demand notice is issued in May the number of instalments offered may be 10 or nine. These provisions are contained in schedule 1 to the Community Charges (Administration and Enforcement) Regulations 1989 (S.I. 1989 No. 438) as amended by the Community Charges and Non-Domestic Rating (Miscellaneous Provisions) Regulations 1991 (S.I. 1991 No. 1127).

Palace of Westminster (Buying Policy)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to require those placing orders for capital equipment including catering equipment, in all parts of the Palace of Westminster, to buy British wherever possible.

Mr. Yeo: Yes, while at the same time observing international agreements on tariffs and trade.

Inner City Partnership Scheme (Hackney)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the annual allocations to the area of the London borough of Hackney through the inner city partnership scheme since its inception, and the projects supported.

Mr. Key: The annual allocations of urban programme resources to the London borough of Hackney, including the district health authority, are as follows:

Year	Final allocation (£ million)
1979-80	[1]11·800
1980-81	[1]15·400
1981-82	[1]15·000
1982-83	12·100
1983-84	12·500
1984-85	13·000
1985-86	12·000
1986-87	11·600
1987-88	10·750
1988-89	9·660
1989-90	6·269
1990-91	6·000
1991-92	5·585

[1]These allocations were to the Hackney-Islington joint partnership and are not directly comparable with the subsequent allocations to Hackney.

Individual projects started each year within the programme since 1985-86 are listed in annual reports available from the council.

Meetings with Local Authorities

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the meetings held by himself and other Ministers from his Department with local authority representatives over the past six months in each case showing (a) the date, (b) venue, (c) subject areas discussed, (d) Ministers present and (e) local authorities and their political control.

Mr. Heseltine: Ministers meet regularly with local authorities on a wide range of subjects.

Disabled People (Housing)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to ensure that council tenants are receiving equal treatment under the disabled facilities grant system; and what is the tenure breakdown of disabled facilities grant approvals.

Mr. Yeo: Council tenants may apply for disabled facilities grants on the same terms as owner occupiers and private-sector tenants, and the local authority must approve or refuse an application within six months of the date it is made. Information on the tenure breakdown of disabled facilities grant approvals is not yet available.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will consider adjusting regulations surrounding the test of resources for disabled facilities grants to enable the test to be applied solely to the disabled person for whom the adaptation is required;

(2) if he will consider adjusting the regulations surrounding the test of resources for disabled facilities grants to enable mortgage responsibilities to be taken into account.

Mr. Yeo: We have received a number of representations from local authorities, grant applicants and others on these matters and will be considering them as part of our review of the house renovation grant system later this year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has for helping home improvement agencies extend the service previously provided to elderly people to younger disabled people.

Mr. Yeo: Under the new arrangements for funding home improvement agencies introduced on 1 April 1991, such agencies are being encouraged to help all those in need including younger disabled people.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to ensure all new houses are accessible to disabled people.

Mr. Yeo: We have done much in recent years to widen the field of organisations providing housing for the disabled, especially within the housing association movement. The Housing Corporation now requires all new build and, if possible, rehabilitation schemes to be built to mobility standards wherever practicable. We have also supported initiatives to encourage private-sector housebuilders to make it a priority that all new housing is built to be accessible to disabled people, to 'visitability' standard.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures of the fourth quarter on disabled facilities grant approvals and payments.

Mr. Yeo: This information is published in table 2·19 of "Housing and Construction Statistics: Great Britain, December Quarter 1990, Part 2". A copy of the table has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to meet the accommodation needs of carers of disabled people living independently in the community.

Mr. Yeo: Currently, it is for local authorities and individual housing associations to decide whether to take account of carers' needs when allocating tenancies to disabled people. However, from 1 April 1993, or sooner if local authorities are able, social services departments will be obliged to take account of carers' needs when assessing the needs of disabled people as part of the community care planning process.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has plans to consult organisations of and for disabled people in the forthcoming review of the disabled facilities grant system.

Mr. Yeo: Yes. Officials plan to meet a range of disability organisations shortly to discuss the operation of the new grants system. They will also be inviting written comments from disability groups with an interest in the review.

International Atomic Energy Agency Publications

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain for his Departmental library a copy of "Low Level Waste Disposal: An Evaluation of Reports Comparing Ocean and Land Based Disposal Options", Document IAEA TECDOC-562, published by the International Atomic Energy Agency in 1990.

Mr. Baldry: Yes.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bar telephones in his Department from connection to premium rate services.

Mr. Heseltine: Where telephone exchange equipment allows, all telephones in central DOE, including Property Holdings, have already been barred from connection to premium rate services.

Samuel Thomas Antonelli

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the activities of Samuel Thomas Antonelli and his company; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Yeo: We have had 39 representations from hon. Members and a few from leaseholders themselves since January 1988. The representations allege harassment and intimidation in various forms against leaseholders of properties whose freeholds are owned by the companies. The existing statutory framework is intended to protect leaseholders against abuse. Their rights under statute have been explained to them. We nevertheless intend to review the present position to see if any further action is necessary.

Quayside Developments

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent so far by the Tyne and Wear urban development corporation on progressing (a) the Newcastle Quayside development in east Newcastle and (b) the Royal Quays development in North Shields.

Mr. Key: To 30 June 1991, £5·547 million had been spent by the Tyne and Wear development corporation at east Quayside, and £9·944 million at Royal Quays.

Planning Applications

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to revise the regulations governing fees for planning applications.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend has today issued a consultation paper seeking views on several proposals to amend the Town and Country Planning (Fees for Applications and Deemed Applications) Regulations 1989 (as amended). The paper covers three categories of proposal:

(a) amendments to the regulations which the Government undertook to make during the passage through Parliament of the Planning and Compensation Bill. These would remove the present 75 per cent. fee concession for a planning application which duplicates another submitted by the same applicant, and would double the fee for the deemed application which may accompany an enforcement appeal;

(b) small amendments to resolve practical difficulties which have come to light in operating the present regulations; and

(c) an invitation to consultees to suggest ways in which the present regulations might be simplified, possibly by restricting the scope of some of the existing concessions and exemptions from the fees.

The paper also refers to the Government's intention to propose a general increase in application fees. The requisite regulations would be laid before Parliament in the autumn and, if approved, could come into effect in January 1992.

Separate but parallel consultation is being carried out by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Pollution Control

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further consideration he has given to arrangements for pollution control.

Mr. Heseltine: The White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", Cm 1200, last year proposed a number of steps aimed at co-ordinating more closely the pollution control activities in England and Wales of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the National Rivers Authority. The Government have decided that the time is now right to go further by bringing together the related functions of HMIP and the NRA to create a new environment agency. As foreshadowed in "This Common Inheritance", the agency would also have responsibility for regulating the handling and disposal of waste—currently a local authority responsibility. The creation of this agency will be a major step forward. The agency will be a non-departmental public body with a board appointed by the Government. It will provide more effective pollution control through greater integration of the staff involved; produce a single body which will be simpler and easier for industry to deal with; and ensure that arrangements for enforcing pollution control remain strong and independent and are seen to be so. It will have responsibility for monitoring the state of air and water, as well as regulating waste disposal, making proposals to Government on standards and regulating emissions and discharges to achieve the standards set by Government. The new agency will not affect the present division of work between the pollution control agencies and the Health and Safety Commission/Executive. Primary legislation to set up the new body will be required. The development of detailed proposals will require close co-operation between my own and other Government Departments and the other interests involved. I am asking Lord Crickhowell, the chairman of the NRA, Dr. David Slater, chief executive of HMIP and the leaders of the local authority associations to work closely together and I shall make a further announcement shortly on arrangements for taking forward this work. I shall be issuing later in the year a consultation document setting out our proposals more fully. Meanwhile, the agencies involved will continue their existing work with the full backing and support of the Government.

Planning and Compensation Bill

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to advise local authorities of the provisions of the Planning and Compensation Bill; and on what date he expects the Bill to come into force.

Sir George Young [holding answer 4 July 1991]: My right hon. Friend expects to make an order under clause 67 of the Planning and Compensation Bill appointing a day about two months after the date of Royal Assent on which many of the provisions of the Bill come into force. Different days will be appointed for those provisions which require subordinate legislation to be made before they can be operative. My Department will be issuing a general circular to local authorities before the first appointed day and further circulars and planning policy guidance notes will be issued as the provisions of the Bill are brought into force over the next year or so. My Department will invite comments on drafts of this guidance where appropriate.

Bass Site (Preston Brook)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance Bass at Preston Brook received from new town development corporations to locate, expand or restructure on the site.

Mr. Yeo [holding answer 4 July 1991]: The former new town development corporation at Runcorn leased a 98-acre site to Bass in 1971. Subsequently some smaller associated sites were also leased to the company. In 1985 Bass purchased the freehold reversion of the site. Apart from certain infrastructure works carried out by the corporation in the normal course of opening up areas for development, I am not aware of any other assistance provided to Bass by the development corporation. I understand, however, that Bass received a regional development grant from the Department of Trade and Industry for its development at Runcorn.

HEALTH

European Private Patients Group

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress of the European Private Patients Group in marketing NHS services in other European countries.

Mr. Dorrell: The European Private Patients Group presently consists of about 30 NHS hospitals across the country. The group is in the process of carrying out a feasibility study to see if the sale of NHS private patient facilities to other European countries is a viable opportunity, and the results should be available in the autumn.

If this venture goes ahead, the group plans to utilise spare capacity in NHS private patient wards and the consultants concerned would treat European private patients in their own time—that is, at times other than when they are contracted to work for the NHS. Profits from the scheme would be available to help fund NHS waiting list initiatives or other developments in local NHS services.

Natal Costs

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs of having a baby in a national health service hospital, ante-natal care, delivery costs and post-natal care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1989-90, the latest year for which figures are available, the average total cost per birth in the national health service was £1,170.

Medical Confidentiality

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take early steps to ensure that medical details relating to named patients are not disclosed in hospital invoices; and if he will propose legislation to make illegal breaches of confidentiality to or by accounts staff.

Mr. Dorrell: Medical details are encoded and means are being investigated for encrypting names in exchanges of data by computer and, in the longer term, eliminating the use of a name altogether. Strict procedures are already in place to protect confidentiality of personal health information by NHS staff and a breach of these is a disciplinary offence. Further legislation is unnecessary.

NHS Reforms

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all programmes currently under way designed to evaluate the national health service reforms introduced in April.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The NHS management executive is undertaking an extensive programme of development work on the health service reforms. Its aim is to assess the effectiveness of alternative approaches to realising the full benefits of the reforms, to develop and disseminate good practice, and to identify any areas where action may be necessary to ensure that the desired effects of the reforms are achieved.

The Department has established a joint NHS review committee with the general medical services committee. This committee will undertake a joint evaluation of the general practitioner fundholding scheme and provide a means for the profession to put forward views on its future development.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what areas of local authority service provision for which he is responsible local authorities are empowered to make payments to individuals who are not employees (a) in the form of a grant or one-off payment and (b) on receipt of paid invoices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the area of child care, local authorities have a statutory duty under the Child Care Act 1980 to promote the welfare of children by diminishing the need to receive children into care or to bring them before a juvenile court. The assistance given under this Act is normally in the form of services, but, in exceptional circumstances, may be in cash.

RU486

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he granted a licence to the manufacturers of RU486 for sale and use of the drug in the United Kingdom; and if he will publish the conditions attached to the licence.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The licence for mifepristone (RU486) was granted on 1 July 1991 as a prescription-only medicine with the following clinical indication:

Medical alternative to surgical termination of intra-uterine pregnancy of up to 63 days gestation based on the first day of the last menstrual period and/or ultrasound scan.

Its use is restricted to NHS hospitals and places approved by the Secretary of State under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967.

I have today placed copies of the company's data sheet in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Lord President of the Council what consideration has been given by Her Majesty's Government to the provision of full funding for the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 27 June 1991]: At a meeting on 26 March the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) acknowledged the need for improved scientific and technological advice to be made available to Members and gave instructions for questionnaires to be issued to all individual Members, and to select committees, in order to establish the extent of demand for services of the kind offered by Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology—POST.

Replies to these questionnaires are now being examined, and in the light of these the Committee will consider whether to proceed towards more detailed proposals for the funding of POST and, if so, what further information and evidence may be required to support such proposals.

Any recommendation from the Services Committee for the provision of substantial public funding for POST will of course need to be submitted to the House.

DEFENCE

HMS Onslaught

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the decommissioned submarine HMS Onslaught was disposed of; to whom; and for what purpose.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: HMS Onslaught was paid off from the active fleet at the end of December 1990. Invitations to tender have since been issued to prospective purchasers, but no decision concerning her final disposal has yet been taken.

The Gulf

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has of tanks and other military equipment deteriorating as a consequence of inadequate maintenance or protection while awaiting sea transport from Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. The condition of tanks and other equipment returning from the Gulf was consistent with their having been used on an operation in a harsh desert environment, but the great majority were fully operational.

HMS Endurance

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how long the structural survey to be carried out on HMS Endurance will take; and when the proposed structural survey on HMS Endurance is due to begin;

(2) when the last structural survey was carried out on HMS Endurance; and what were the results;

(3) for what reason the structural survey of HMS Endurance was not begun at an earlier stage of her current period in port.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Endurance is now 35 years old and is not built to the standards which would be required in a new ship for operation in ice. HMS Endurance has been subject to periodic structural surveys, but following the collision with an iceberg in 1989, which holed the ship and caused other structural damage, a system of full annual structural surveys was instituted. The last structural survey was carried out in 1990, following which the condition of the ship was judged acceptable for deployment to the Antarctic for the 1990-91 austral summer season. HMS Endurance returned from this deployment on 31 May and, following a period of leave and ship preparation, entered dock on 26 June. The 1991 structural survey commenced as planned on 1 July and initial results should be available within the next few weeks. The results of the survey will be considered in conjunction with the results now available of a metallurgical analysis of plate removed when the ship was repaired following the 1989 collision.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what vessel is planned to replace HMS Endurance on ice patrol in the South Atlantic should the proposed structural survey prove her unsound.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: HMS Endurance is the only Royal Navy ship of suitable design for the ice patrol task. No decision has been taken on her replacement.

Guardsman Hicks

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the weekly income announced to the House on 1 July, Official Report, column 45, received by Guardsman Hicks, would have been paid to him as a result of his service and his unemployment, regardless of the injuries he sustained on the Batus firing range on 7 July 1989.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: About 16 per cent.

Defence Cuts

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the projected cash savings in the defence budget for 1992-93 and 1993-94 which will be achieved as a result of his projected cuts in the strength of the British armed forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cash plans for defence announced last autumn are being reviewed in this year's public expenditure survey in the light of the development of our plans for the restructuring of the armed forces. The level of funding required in 1992-93 and the two following years will be announced in the autumn statement.

Transportation of Explosive Materials

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has now reached a decision on whether future transportation of explosive materials to Ministry of Defence establishments will be by road rather than by rail.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The policy regarding the movement of explosive materials to Ministry of Defence establishments will not change. Where practicable and cost effective, movement of explosive materials by rail is the preferred option. However, there will still be a degree of movement of explosives by road when these criteria are not met.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will bar telephones in his Department from connection to premium rate services.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has already taken technical and procedural measures to bar access to these services.

Royal Navy Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the companies exhibiting products or services at the Royal Navy equipment exhibition being held in Portsmouth in September.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is our practice not to provide such a list until the exhibition catalogue is published.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visitors are expected at the Royal Navy equipment exhibition in Portsmouth from 1 to 6 September.

Mr. Alan Clark: Based on previous attendances, we would expect a total of around 20,000 visitors.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of organising the Royal Navy equipment exhibition being held in Portsmouth from 1 to 6 September, including the salaries of the military personnel.

Mr. Alan Clark: All additional costs incurred in relation to the exhibition will be recovered from participating companies.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel will be on duty during the Royal Navy equipment exhibition in Portsmouth in September.

Mr. Alan Clark: One hundred and seventy-seven military personnel will be on duty during the Royal Navy equipment exhibition.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be opening the Royal Navy equipment exhibition in September.

Mr. Alan Clark: This has not yet been decided.

HMS Challenger

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the bids received for HMS Challenger; and when he expects the vessel to be sold.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: It is not the practice of this Department to disclose details of bids which were submitted in commercial confidentiality. Marketing of HMS Challenger continues and it would be premature to give a date by which final sale may be expected.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Toxic Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research he has carried out on the comparative stringency of the controls on (a) toxic waste and (b) hazardous waste incinerators in (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) the rest of the United Kingdom, (iii) the other countries of the European Community, (iv) Canada and (v) the United States of America.

Mr. Needham: Published research information from around the world is, of course, available to the Government on incineration practices and controls and officials have visited facilities in other countries. Controls over waste incineration exercised in Northern Ireland must comply with the policy and standards of the United Kingdom which are governed by the requirements of the European Community.

Environmental Audit

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for which plants he intends to have an independent environmental audit carried out in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Environmental audits are to allow a company to examine its performance in terms of emissions to atmosphere, discharges to sewer and in the production and disposal of waste. There are no proposals for the Government to require independent audits of this nature.

Coronary Heart Care

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make it his policy to allocate resources to coronary heart medicine according to the extent of the problem; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what measures will be adopted to reduce the waiting list in respect of operations for coronary heart care in each of the health and social services boards.

Mr. Hanley: Cardiac surgery is, and will continue to be, a priority for the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland. The Government are well aware of the extent of heart disease in Northern Ireland and are committed to reducing the time that those requiring heart surgery have to wait for an operation. Over the past two years, significant additional resources of £300,000 have been invested to increase the level of operations. A capital scheme costing £1·5 million to extend the cardiac recovery area at the Royal Victoria hospital is due to be completed in October. This will permit the appointment of a fourth cardiac surgeon and supporting team and I recently announced that, as part of the development in regional medical services this year, a further £300,000 would be made available to meet the costs involved.

In the longer term, the Government are committed to working to reduce the incidence of coronary heart disease in Northern Ireland through health education and promotion and several years ago launched the "Change of Heart" campaign. This 10-year programme is now being carried forward throughout the Province by the four health and social services boards.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have died as a result of heart problems in each of the health and social services boards in each of the last five years who were on a waiting list for a coronary heart operation.

Mr. Hanley: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are currently waiting for operations in respect of coronary heart care in each of the health and social services boards.

Mr. Hanley: All patients in Northern Ireland waiting for cardiac operations are included in a single cardiac surgery waiting list at the Royal Victoria hospital which provides the service for the whole of Northern Ireland. Separate waiting lists are not therefore maintained for each board. At 31 March 1991, the number of patients on the waiting list was 869.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current waiting time for operations in respect of coronary heart care in each of the health and social services boards.

Mr. Hanley: All patients in Northern Ireland waiting for operations for coronary heart care are included in a single cardiac surgery waiting list at the Royal Victoria hospital which provides the service for the whole of Northern Ireland. Separate waiting lists are not therefore maintained for each board. At 31 March 1991, the number of patients on the waiting list by waiting time was:

Months	Number
0-2	111
3-5	90
6-8	44
9-11	53
12-23	162
24+	409
Total	869

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many reported cases of BSE there have been in each of the last six months; how many cattle have been killed; and from what number of farms in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Month	Reported "Suspect" Cases	Cattle Killed
		Number	Farms
January	23	21	20
February	21	17	17
March	13	18	18
April	15	8	8
May	18	12	11
June	22	14	14
Totals	112	90	88

In Northern Ireland there are some 1·5 million cattle in 26,000 herds.

Historic Monuments and Buildings

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the historic monuments and buildings which are registered by the historic monuments and buildings branch of the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland; indicating in each case whether they are (a) listed buildings, (b) owned and maintained by a public body, (c) otherwise protected or (d) unprotected.

Mr. Needham: As there are currently more than 7,800 buildings listed and 1,100 monuments scheduled by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, including 170 in the Department's care, it is not practical to provide the information as requested. However, the lists of buildings and monuments are open for inspection by the public at the offices of the historic monuments and buildings branch of the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland in Hill street, Belfast. All listed buildings are afforded a degree of protection by the Planning (NI) Order 1972 and scheduled monuments by the Historic Monuments Act (NI) 1971. Information on current ownership of listed buildings or monuments is not held in every case by the Department.

Strangford Lough

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the membership of the proposed executive committee and advisory committee for the management of Strangford lough will be subject to consultation with the Government of the Republic of Ireland in accordance with the provisions of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Needham: No. Committees of this kind are not the subject of consultation with the Government of the Republic of Ireland under the provisions of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

TRANSPORT

Stockport Bypass

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received representations from Stockport metropolitan borough council urging delay in the construction of the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass.

Mr. Chope: No.

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his current timetable for the building of the A6(M) Stockport north-south bypass.

Mr. Chope: A start has been made on the diversion of some statutory undertakers apparatus. Subject to the satisfactory clearance of the remaining statutory procedures, work on the main contract should start in the spring 1993.

Motoring Offences

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will institute a system for recording the type and make of vehicles involved in motoring offences and road accidents and publish them periodically; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: We published earlier this year the first of a new statistical series showing casualty rates by make and model of car—"Transport Statistics Report—Car and Driver: Injury Accident and Casualty Rates, Great Britain 1989", HMSO, May 1991. We have no plans to extend this to recording offences by vehicle make and model.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made concerning the compulsory fitting of speed governors to heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Chope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) on 4 July at column 174.

Bypasses

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the provision of bypasses.

Mr. Chope: Bypasses are an important part of our commitment to civilising road transport. We know that they make a significant contribution to improving the quality of life in our towns and villages.

I am pleased to announce that we propose to add to the roads programme a further 15 schemes which are new or extended bypasses or related improvements, and three scheme identification studies, at a total cost of £85 million. The package includes new bypasses for Christleton and Waverton near Chester, Turvey in Bedfordshire, Kilkhampton in Cornwall, and Bishop Burton in Yorkshire. Other components are improved bypasses for Ilminster in Somerset, Guestling Thorn and Icklesham in East Sussex, Woofferton in Shropshire and Skeffington in Leicestershire. Studies will consider alternatives to the A40 through Cheltenham, and the possibility of relief for the A45 through the south of Coventry and for the A663 Broadway in Manchester.

The bypass programme has made a major contribution to improving urban conditions over many years. One hundred and three trunk road bypasses have been built in England since 1979 and over 170 are planned. Twenty-one are now under construction, with a further 19 due to start this financial year. In addition, since 1986-87, a total of 191 local authority bypasses supported by transport supplementary grant have been completed, 64 are under construction, and 30 more are due to start this financial year.

Bypasses in themselves achieve great environmental benefits by redirecting traffic to more suitable routes. A new bypass can have a much bigger impact on the quality of the local environment if complementary measures are implemented at the same time which take advantage of the fresh opportunities which arise if through traffic is removed or significantly reduced.

These opportunities can include the introduction of traffic calming measures, improved provision for pedestrians, cyclists and other vulnerable road users, landscaping and environmental enhancements.

Last year in the enviroment White Paper we announced our intention to set up demonstration projects in a number of towns to link the provision of a trunk road bypass with measures in the bypassed towns. I am pleased to announce that the towns selected for the demonstration projects are:

Berkhamsted
Dalton-in-Furness
Market Harborough
Petersfield
Wadebridge
Whitchurch

Local authorities responded enthusiastically to an invitation to nominate towns for the project, and it has not been easy to choose just six from the many interesting possibilities put forward. But the towns selected offer a good range of issues and opportunities, and in each case the local authorities already have proposals to build on the contribution being made by the trunk road bypass.

The bypass demonstration project will explore the possibilities in these towns, together with the local authorities, the Civic Trust and community interests. It will show what can be achieved in specific locations, and provide new ideas and useful guidance for the many local authorities whose towns will benefit from bypasses over the next few years.

Road Accidents

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the road accident fatality rates for Great Britain, other EC countries, the United States of America, Canada and Japan.

Mr. Chope: The fatality rates expressed as the number of fatalities per 100,000 population in 1988 are published in "Road Accidents Great Britain" and are set out in the following table.

Fatality rate per 100,000 population, selected countries: 1988

Country	Rate
Great Britain	9
Belgium	20
Denmark	14
France	21
West Germany	13
Greece	17
Ireland	[1]13
Italy	13
Luxembourg	23
Netherlands	9
Portugal	33
Spain	21
Canada	[1]16
Japan	11
USA	19

[1] 1987 figure.

Comparable fatality rates expressed as the number of fatalities per billion vehicle kilometres depend upon the availability of estimates of traffic in individual countries. Not all countries make direct estimates of road traffic, nor are the published estimates on a consistent basis. However, the Netherlands Road Safety Research Institute has recently published the following estimates:

Fatality rate per billion vehicle km, selected countries: 1988

Country	Rate
Great Britain	13
Belgium	36
Denmark	20
France	29
West Germany	19
Greece	72
Ireland	21

Speedlink

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what services will be commencing on 8 July to replace Speedlink.

Mr. Freeman: From 8 July British Rail will be running 125 trains a day to replace the Speedlink wagonload and related trainload services. Tigerail will be running freight train services from Cornwall and from Hampshire to Scotland and British Rail will commence a container service from north-east Scotland to Glasgow on a trial basis. About 70 per cent. of the domestic Speedlink traffic has been retained on rail. British Rail will also be running dedicated services to the Dover train ferry from all principal industrial locations in Britain for European traffic. Eighty-five per cent. of existing train ferry traffic has been retained to encourage and build up European business prior to the opening of the channel tunnel. I very much welcome this achievement.

Cycle Lanes (London)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further progress has been made in implementing his policy of creating 1,000 miles of cycle lanes in London; and what is his policy regarding the creation of cycle lanes through royal parks.

Mr. Chope: Following the seminar hosted by my Department last November, a group of cycling officers from the London boroughs has been set up and continues to meet regularly with the object of co-ordinating the provision of cycle facilities in London.

The London planning advisory committee has endorsed the results of consultation with the boroughs on the 1,000-mile network and that information is being used to produce the maps of the network which will be ready for distribution to boroughs in the autumn.

I am discussing the provision for cyclists in the royal parks with my noble Friend the Minister of State, Department of the Environment.

Explosive Materials

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what additional safety precautions he intends to take to ensure the safe transport by road of explosive materials to Ministry of Defence bases.

Mr. Chope: The transport by road of explosive materials is subject to the Road Traffic (Carriage of Explosives) Regulations 1989 with which the MOD must comply. I have no plans to require additional precautions.

Transport Single Market

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to hasten the creation of a single market in transport in the European Community.

Mr. McLoughlin: The creation of a single market in transport is a key objective for the Government. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic attended the EC Transport Council in Luxembourg on 21 and 22 June and secured agreement to a directive on the development of Community railways which will allow access by individual rail companies to other member states' railway systems for the purpose of combined transport operations. In addition my right hon. Friend stressed the pressing need to fulfil the legal requirement to liberalise international road passenger transport, while my hon. Friend emphasised that progress had to be made on liberalising maritime cabotage.

The June Transport Council is but a recent example of the many meetings in which the Government have pressed our Community partners for more rapid movement in establishing a genuine single market in transport. The Luxembourg European Council on 20 June made a new series of commitments to liberalisation in the various transport modes.

London Buses

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations have been received on access and provision for disabled people in response to the consultation paper "A Bus Strategy for London".

Mr. Freeman: The consultation paper, "A Bus Strategy for London" did not deal specifically with the provision of bus services for disabled people. Nevertheless, a number of those who responded to the paper—including the hon. Lady—commented on this point. Their views have been fully taken into account. A statement on the conclusions reached following the consultation exercise will be made shortly.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he plans to meet representatives of the Greater London Association of Disabled People to discuss the implications of bus deregulation for people with disabilities.

Mr. Freeman: I should be pleased to meet representatives of the Greater London Association for Disabled People to discuss their views on access to public transport for disabled people.

Energy Efficiency

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy in respect of the recommendations in paragraph 130 of the third report of the Select Committee on Energy on Energy Efficiency, HC91.

Mr. McLoughlin: A response to the Select Committee on Energy's recommendations on energy efficiency has been sent to the Committee. I understand that it will be published shortly.

Nuclear Waste (Accidents)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the incidents reported to the International Atomic Energy Agency under the auspices of the 1972 convention on the prevention of marine pollution by dumping of wastes and other matter, concerning accidents at sea involving radioactive materials (a) involved nuclear materials originating in the United Kingdom, (b) involved nuclear materials destined for the United Kingdom and (c) took place in or near to United Kingdom territorial waters; and if he will obtain a copy for his Department library of the IAEA report on these matters.

Mr. Mcloughlin: None of the incidents reported, concerning accidents during transport at sea, involved nuclear materials originating from or destined for the United Kingdom or took place in or near United Kingdom territorial waters. Several incidents have been reported, however, involving sealed radioactive sources, details of which have not yet been incorporated into the IAEA database. The Department has a draft copy of the IAEA report on these matters.

Newhaven-Dieppe Ferry Service

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will discuss with his French counterpart the Newhaven-Dieppe ferry service;

(2) what steps he is taking to secure the resumption and long-term future of the Newhaven-Dieppe ferry service.

Mr. Mcloughlin: The Newhaven-Dieppe ferry service has been suspended because of an industrial dispute between French seamen and the Sealink ferry company. Commercial negotiations are under way to resolve the dispute and the French authorities have appointed a mediator. It would not be appropriate for Her Majesty's Government to seek to become involved at this stage. We are, however, monitoring the situation closely.

Ships (Specifications)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British-registered ships are built to STAB 90 specifications.

Mr. Mcloughlin: The information is not available at the moment in the form requested. The damage stability characteristics of all United Kingdom roll on/roll off passenger ferries are being urgently assessed in accordance with procedures adopted by the International Maritime Organisation in May. The level of their compliance with STAB 90—SOLAS 90—specifications will be available when that exercise is complete.

Port Inspections

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of port state control inspections over the past 10 years, the percentage of inspections as a total of vessels using British ports in each year, and the number and percentage of ferries inspected using British ports in each year.

Mr. McLoughlin: The number of foreign ships given port state inspections at United Kingdom ports from 1983 to 1990, and the numbers of inspections as a percentage of the numbers of foreign ships using United Kingdom ports in those years were:

Year	Numbers	Per cent.
1983	2,557	40
1984	2,529	39
1985	2,532	39
1986	2,439	32
1987	2,250	35
1988	1,839	30
1989	1,692	[1]27
1990	2,118	[1]34

[1] Based on the 1988 figure for ships visiting, which is the latest available.

Figures for earlier years are not available.

The number of inspections of foreign-registered roll on/roll off passenger ferries at United Kingdom ports from 1988 to 1990 were:

Year	Number
1988	136
1989	134
1990	82

Most foreign ferries were inspected twice in each of the three years and the numbers of inspections consequently exceed the numbers of such ferries available for inspection at our ports. The number of foreign ferries using United Kingdom ports varies considerably during the year. At March 1990, a total of 49 such vessels were operating. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Air Services (Gibraltar)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his present policy relating to the liberalisation of air services to and from Gibraltar.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 5 July 1991]: The United Kingdom has been at the forefront of moves to liberalise air services arrangements in the European Community. It has been agreed within the Community that Gibraltar airport will be able to benefit from the EC liberalisation packages when the Gibraltar airport agreement is implemented.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in Tower Hamlets on employment training schemes or other schemes operated through the training and enterprise council network.

Mr. Jackson: The table shows numbers of people employed on the main training programmes operated by the London East TEC, of which Tower Hamlets forms part.

LETEC—participants on TEC operated schemes at 24 May 1991

	Number
Employment training	3,153
Youth training	4,052
Enterprise allowance scheme	782

Note: LETEC covers Tower Hamlets, Waltham Forest, Redbridge, Havering, Barking and Newham.

Chemicals Haulage

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the grades of officers involved in the recent north-west roadside check of lorries carrying chemicals; and whether this activity is part of the job descriptions of all the officers so employed on that day.

Mr. Forth: The following grades of staff in the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) were involved in the Chemcheck North West exercise on 26 June:

Band B inspector
Band D inspector
Band E inspector
Band F inspector
Higher professional technical officer
Administrative officer

One of HSE's main objectives is to promote and secure compliance with relevant health and safety legislation and this extends to and includes the legislation that applies to the transport of hazardous substances or goods by road. All staff in HSE's field operations division are responsible for ensuring that this main objective is met and contribute either directly or indirectly by a variety of means including the inspection of work activities, enforcement, giving advice and information and the provision of clerical support. However, their job descriptions do not include specific reference to undertaking roadside checks on lorries carrying chemicals.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in Tower Hamlets in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jackson: Employment estimates for local authority districts are available only from the censuses of employment taken in 1981, 1984, 1987 and 1989. Data for Tower Hamlets are given in the table below. The estimates relate only to employees in employment; they exclude the self-employed and also members of Her Majesty's forces.

Employees in employment in Tower Hamlets

September each year	Numbers (000s)
1981	84·3
1984	81·1
1987	96·3
1989	104·0

Employment Schemes (Hackney)

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the annual allocations to the area of the London borough of Hackney through his Department's special employment and inner cities schemes since their inception, and the projects supported.

Mr. Jackson: The Employment Department's programmes are not allocated to its regions on the basis of local authority boundaries, and it is not therefore possible to provide the information requested. All Employment Department programmes are available in urban programme areas, including Hackney.

Pregnant Workers

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress was made on the draft directive on the protection of pregnant workers at the Council of Ministers' meeting on 24 and 25 June; what were the voting figures on the directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave on 4 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell).

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the companies formerly members of the national training providers unit which have withdrawn from the provision of youth training.

Mr. Jackson: The following companies which formerly contracted through my Department's TECs and national providers unit have withdrawn from the provision of youth training: ASDA Stores Ltd, B and Q plc., Dairy Crest Ltd., Habitat Designs Ltd., Newey and Eyre Ltd., Whitbread and Co. plc (Hotel and Catering), Wolsley Centres Ltd., and Woolworths plc. This represents only a small percentage (5 per cent.) of those national organisations currently delivering youth training through local contracts with training and enterprise councils.

Employment Statistics, Congleton

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women are currently unemployed in Congleton; and what percentage these figures represent of the local work force.

Mr. Jackson: In May 1991 the number of unemployed claimants, not seasonally adjusted, in the Congleton parliamentary constituency was 1,403 males and 654 females.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) men and (b) women have been employed in Congleton in each of the past 12 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: Employment estimates for parliamentary constituencies are available only from the censuses of employment taken in 1981, 1984, 1987 and 1989. Data for the Congleton constituency are given in the table below. The estimates relate only to employees in employment; they exclude the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.

Employees in employment in Congleton

September each year	Numbers (thousands) Males	Females	All
1981	n.a.	n.a.	27·7
1984	15·3	11·8	27·1
1987	17·3	13·2	30·5
1989	17·8	14·2	32·0

n.a. = Separate estimates for males and females are not available for 1981.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what percentage and by what numbers unemployment in Congleton has risen over the past 12-month period.

Mr. Jackson: In the parliamentary constituency of Congleton, unemployment, not seasonally adjusted, increased by 769 or 59·7 per cent. in the 12 months to May 1991.

Training for Disabled People

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the training of disabled people.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 11 June at column 776 to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke).

Industry Training Organisations

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made in the work of industry training organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The White Paper, "Employment for the 1990s" (Cmd 540), set out the roles that were expected of industry training organisations (ITOs) in the national training framework. It also announced that there was to be a review of progress in each industry sector.

The results of this independent review are now available. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Library. The findings point to the level of performance having generally improved since the last review in 1987. There was evidence of greater commitment within sectors to the key tasks of ITOs, particularly to the development of occupational standards that underpin national vocational qualifications and their Scottish equivalents. The researchers took the view that the training system continues to need a network of effective industry training organisations in order to operate, and the Government are happy to endorse that conclusion. We shall be examining the detailed recommendations made in the report to see how we can help in improving the effectiveness of these independent organisations.

The Government welcome this endorsement of our approach to sector-based training of removing the compulsion and bureaucracy of the statutory system and replacing it with voluntary arrangements.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 9 July 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Attorney-General how much was claimed under (a) the legal advice and assistance scheme and (b) legal advice and assistance in respect of (i) immigration cases, and (ii) asylum cases in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

The Attorney-General: Separate information is not available for the cost of legal advice and assistance for immigration or asylum cases. However, the amounts that were paid for advice and assistance, under the legal aid "green form" scheme for all immigration and nationality cases are set out in the table.

1988-89	781,532
1989-90	1,681,960
1990-91	2,652,727

Legal aid is also available for judicial review proceedings concerning immigration and asylum cases, but separate figures for the amount spent are not available.

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has received the Director of Public Prosecutions' report on the Crown prosecution service for the year 1990-91; and when the report will be laid before Parliament.

The Attorney-General: I have received the annual report from the Director of Public Prosecutions today, and have placed copies in the Libraries of both Houses.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Woolwich Tax Model

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham of 2 July, when counsel, other than by affidavits, challenged the conclusions of the tax model in each court.

Mr. Maples: As I made clear in the answer to which my hon. Friend refers, the challenge to the conclusions of the tax model was contained in the affidavits which were put in evidence in all the courts up to the House of Lords.

Guest Houses

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the numbers of Inland Revenue inspectors to ensure that all guest houses which should register for uniform business rates are encouraged to do so.

Mr. Maude: There are no plans to increase the numbers of Inland Revenue staff specifically to deal with this matter. However, Her Majesty's Government aim to ensure that staff will be maintained at the level required to enable the valuation office to carry out its statutory duties.

Customs and Excise

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of all bonus schemes in operation in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise executive units.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs have one bonus scheme in operation in their executive units—the special bonus scheme. Special bonuses are used to reward exceptional performance in particularly demanding tasks or situations. They take the form of taxable, non-pensionable lump sum payments. The overall cost for running the scheme in each executive unit is restricted to 0·2 per cent. of the pay bill.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise executive units since the reorganisation along next steps lines; and separately identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to the introduction of executive units.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise set up 30 executive units on 1 April 1991. Their key performance indicators, expressed in aggregate for the 21 collection executive units, including those relating to quality of service, are listed in the published Customs and Excise management plan for 1991-92 to 1993-94. The previous year's management plan similarly identifies quality of service indicators operative prior to the introduction of executive units. Copies of these plans are in the House Library. The overall number of quality of service indicators more than doubled from 1 April 1991.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those new facilities for staff such as nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise since its reorganisation on next steps lines.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise is developing its "Look After Your Heart" campaign and seminars for liaison officers from executive units are planned in September. The views of managers and staff are currently being sought towards a more positive departmental policy on smoking at work. Health screening exercises are being undertaken in two locations with another planned. A staff assistance programme is being developed, which will make health care advice available throughout the Department and stress management awareness training available where necessary.

Customs and Excise participates in 25 play schemes. The latest, in Glasgow, opens on 8 July. The Department's first on-site nursery was opened in Wembley in February and has facilities for 20 children. A further 20 places have recently been secured in a private nursery in Southend. Three other on-site nurseries are planned.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the last annual report for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise was published; and when the next one is due.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The report for the year ending 1989-90 was published on 10 October 1990. The report for 1990-91 will be published in October.

Inland Revenue Inspectors

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total number of Inland Revenue inspectors for each year since 1979.

Mr. Maude: The table sets out the total numbers of Inland Revenue staff in the Department's inspector grades at 1 April for each year since 1979.

	Number
1979	6,551
1980	6,561
1981	6,516
1982	6,396
1983	6,379
1984	6,530
1985	6,462
1986	6,572
1987	6,852
1988	7,116
1989	7,512
1990	7,816
1991	8,155

Departmental Bills (Payments)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he proposes to extend his Department's standing instructions to all Government Departments on the timing of the payment of bills to small businesses and local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The standing guidance to Government Departments on the timing of the payment of bills, which is set out in "Government Accounting", the Treasury's guide on accounting and financial procedures, does not apply to the payment of bills by local authorities, which are responsible for their own policy in this matter.

Small Businesses

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has completed his investigation of the treatment of small businesses by the banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maples: My officials and officials at the Bank of England are looking at banks' interest rates and charges to small businesses, and how lending policies are being applied. Once the facts have been fully established and considered, a statement will be made in due course.

Child Care

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he accepts the estimates provided by the Campaign for Tax Relief on Child Care of the costs and benefits to the Exchequer of extending tax exemption to all legal employer-assisted child care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The Government do not accept the TRAC estimates as they are based on a number of questionable assumptions about the likely behavioural response to extending tax relief for child care, and appear to take no account of some relevant factors.

Public Information

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the reference numbers of documents held in the file T160/763/F14755; and if he will, in each case, state the other file or files in which copies are retained.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The Treasury has found no record which would enable it to establish what documents were on the file or what reference numbers, if any, they may have had.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Groups

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds his Department grants annually to (a) the Franco-British parliamentary group, (b) the British-German parliamentary group and (c) the British-American parliamentary group; and when these amounts were last revised.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek a debate in the UN on the report by Michael Priestly on the health consequences to Iraq of continued international sanctions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The UN Security Council will conduct its next review of the sanctions on imports by Iraq in August, as provided for in Security Council resolution 687. The Council's discussions will no doubt be informed by the findings of the UN mission led by Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan which is currently visiting Iraq.

Non-proliferation Regimes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will obtain for his departmental library a copy of the report prepared by Zachary S. Davis of "The Congressional Research Service on Non-proliferation Regimes: A Comparative Analysis of Policies to Control the Spread of Nuclear, Chemical and Biological Weapons and Missiles", released on 1 April by the United States Library of Congress.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Yes.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much land in the Falklands is now owned by Falkland islanders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: With the recent purchase by the Falklands Islands Government of four farms previously owned by the Falkland Islands company, Falkland islanders, or their Government, now own about 95 per cent. of land in the islands.

Gabon and Congo

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he proposes to make for the protection of British interests in Gabon and Congo after the closure of British embassies in those countries.

Mrs. Chalker: Following the decision earlier this year to close our embassies in Libreville and Brazzaville, the Governments of Gabon and Congo have been informed of our intentions and both embassies will close by the end of July. The protection and promotion of British interests in these countries will in future be the responsibility of the British embassy in Kinshasa. Accreditation will shortly be sought for our ambassador in Kinshasa to be concurrently ambassador (non-resident) in Gabon and Congo.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Curriculum Council

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been expended to the latest available date by the Northern Ireland Curriculum Council on the printing and circulation of its guidance material to the teaching profession.

Dr. Mawhinney: To the end of June this year, the cost of publication and distribution of guidance materials produced by the Northern Ireland Curriculum Council to the teaching profession was £182,365.

Intergovernmental Talks

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who will chair the third strand of the talks involving the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland Governments and the constitutional political parties of Northern Ireland.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the statement that I made in the House on 3 July 1991, Official Report, columns 319-20.

As the talks that were held on the basis of my statement of 26 March 1991 have now concluded without the third strand having commenced, this question does not arise.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relates to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [Holding answer 3 July 1991]: The Government remain committed to developing care in the community. The regional strategy for the health and personal social services in Northern Ireland and the recent policy paper "People First", which charts the way forward for community care in the 1990s, both identify improvements in attitudes and services which need to be made to enhance the quality of life for disabled people. They both stress the importance of assessing individual people's needs and targeting services to help them to live in their own homes for as long as possible and to participate fully in the life of the community.

Stemming from "People First", the Department of Health and Social Services has recently issued detailed guidance requiring health and social services boards, from 1 April 1991, to put in place new complaints procedures which will ensure the formal investigation of all complaints or representations about community care services made by individuals or by anyone on their behalf. From April 1993, comprehensive assessment arrangements will be introduced covering the community care needs of all people who are vulnerable through aging or disability. The guidance on complaints procedures required boards not only to publish the new arrangements but to ensure that any relevant information is made available in an appropriate format to sensorily handicapped or homebound people. The guidance on assessment and care management will similarly be publicised and, in providing for the appointment of a representative of the disabled person, will enable any problems in communication faced by the disabled person to be addressed.

Government support was given to the introduction of the Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 on the understanding that it would be brought into effect in stages as resources permitted. On 1 April 1991, sections 5 and 6 of the Act and parts of sections 4, 8 and 11 were brought into force. These provisions require health and social services boards to assess the needs of disabled people for certain social welfare services, and the ability of their carers to provide appropriate care. Boards are also required, in association with education and library boards, to ensure that young disabled people have a smooth transition from full-time education to adult life. Substantial resources have been made available to boards to enable them to implement these provisions.

With the introduction of these sections, Northern Ireland is now fully in line with Great Britain as far as the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 is concerned. The intention is to maintain this position of parity.

Of the provisions of the 1989 Act still to be brought into effect, sections 1 and 2 provide for the appointment of an authorised representative either by the disabled person concerned or by the relevant health and social services board. Section 3 requires the relevant board to give a disabled person or his authorised representative the right to make representations about his need for services, to provide on request a written statement on the assessed need for services and to respond to representations about any such statement.

The implementation of these sections has been overtaken by the wider developments in the community care field. In particular, the far-reaching proposals in "People First" embody the spirit of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Act. These, and the other broadly-based developments described above, reflect the Government's continuing drive towards substantial improvements in community care services in Northern Ireland and its commitment to provide the resources necessary to achieve this goal.

Recommendations on public transport

The Government have a strong policy commitment to improve transport facilities for disabled people in Northern Ireland. The Transport (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1990 enables the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland to grant aid the provision of transport services and facilities for the disabled. The Government fund and are represented on the transport advisory committee set up by the Northern Ireland Council on Disability. The Government will also subsidise dial-a-ride operations in Northern Ireland, initially for north and west Belfast. Ulsterbus/Citybus and Northern Ireland Railways are working to improve the accessibility of public transport services to the disabled through suitable facilities at bus and rail stations and the provision of appropriate features on buses and rolling stock.

Recommendation on Access

The Northern Ireland building regulations dealing with facilities for disabled people are currently being revised. The proposals will be issued for consultation later this year. They will be based on those currently being finalised in England and Wales which cover all new public buildings and some extensions, including many of the categories of buildings mentioned in the manifesto such as leisure and recreational facilities, health service centres, and also shops, libraries, and so on.

The training and employment agency in Northern Ireland provides an employment assessment, guidance, training and placement service for people with disabilities. The service has recently been reorganised with the introduction of a disablement advisory service. Disablement employment advisers, based throughout Northern Ireland, provide local facilities and develop links with area health and social services boards for the progression of people with disabilities from medical rehabilitation to employment-related services. They actively promote good employment practices with employers and, wherever possible, seek to provide employment and training opportunities alongside able-bodied workers.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Terms

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much time is spent in school by children in (a) England and Wales, (b) Japan, (c) Germany and (d) France.

Mr. Fallon: International comparison cannot be precise. The figures in the table compare the number of hours of weekly attendance at school and the number of weeks in the school year.

	Weekly hours of attendance		Length of school year
	Primary	Secondary
England and Wales	26½-30 (samples)	28½-31 (samples)	38 weeks
France	27 (minimum)	24 (minimum)	33 weeks
Germany	Up to 36	Up to 36	40 weeks
Japan	25-29	30	35 weeks minimum

Science and Engineering Research Council

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the closing dates for applications for postgraduate awards from the Science and Engineering Research Council in (i) Northern Ireland and (ii) the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The closing date for receipt of nominations for postgraduate awards funded by SERC is 31 July. This date applies whether the student is to study in Northern Ireland or elsewhere in the United Kingdom, providing that he or she is eligible for a SERC award. The student must satisfy eligibility criteria on both qualifications and residence.

The SERC residence criterion refers to postgraduate students ordinarily resident in Great Britain. Support for students ordinarily resident in Northern Ireland is provided by the Department of Education in Northern Ireland, DENI—not SERC. The DENI closing date for receipt of applications for its awards competition is 1 May for students wishing to study in Great Britain, and 1 August for those wishing to study in Northern Ireland.

Schools (Barnet)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children are educated in voluntary aided (a) infants, (b) junior and (c) high schools in Barnet; and how many pupils are educated in (i) Church of England, (ii) Roman Catholic and (iii) Jewish voluntary-aided schools in Barnet.

Mr. Fallon: The number of pupils in Barnet educated in voluntary-aided schools is given in the table, by type and denomination of school. The figures relate to January 1990, the latest date for which information is available.

Barnet LEA
Pupils in voluntary aided schools by type and denomination

Type of School	Number of pupils
Infant Schools	616
Junior Schools	734
Junior and Infant Schools	5,637
Secondary Schools	6,676
Total pupils in Barnet in voluntary aided schools	13,663

By Denomination	Number of Pupils
Church of England Schools	4,753
Roman Catholic Schools	6,493
Jewish Schools	1,826
Other Schools	591
Total pupils in Barnet in voluntary aided schools	13,663

Special Needs

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in rank order the amount spent by each local education authority on special needs (a) as an amount per pupil-student and (b) as a proportion of total local education authority expenditure on education.

Mr. Fallon: Returns from local education authorities identify separately their expenditure on special schools, home and hospital tuition, child guidance and educational psychological services. However, those returns do not show separately the amount spent to meet the special needs of pupils in primary and secondary schools and of further education students.

For 1988-89, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available, table 1 indicates spending on those items which are separately indentified as an amount per pupil in special schools. Table 2 indicates that spending as a proportion of total local education authority expenditure on education.

TRANSPORT

Wilhelmina J

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive an interim report of the inspector's inquiry into the loss of the Wilhelmina J fishing vessel.

Mr. McLoughlin: The chief inspector of marine accidents submitted the inspector's interim report, which contained the initial findings of the inspector regarding the collision between the Zulfikar and Wilhelmina J, to the Secretary of State on 24 April. The inspector's inquiry continues.

Thames Passenger Services

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sums he has authorised in each of the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 for assisting passenger services on the River Thames in London; and what were the approximate number of passenger miles travelled on assisted services, and the assistance in pence per mile respectively for the year 1990-91.

Mr. McLoughlin: The £500,000 grant made by the Government in 1989 was part of a £2·5 million public-private sector initiative to promote and improve the service provided, and to enable the undertaking to establish its commercial viability over a three-year period. We have made no further grants. The current operator, the River Bus Partnership, is not required to provide us with details of passenger carryings.

Seat Belts

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of injuries caused in each of the last five years to passengers in heavy goods vehicles or commercial vehicles who are not wearing seat belts.

Mr. Chope: Information regarding seat belt use by casualties in heavy goods vehicles or commercial vehicles is not available. Information on passenger casualties in light goods vehicles is given in the table. Data for 1990 are not yet available.

Injuries to passengers in light goods vehicles[1] who were not wearing a seat belt: Great Britain: 1985-89

	Number
1985	952
1986	980
1987	899
1988	938
1989	885

[1] Light goods vehicles are defined as goods vehicles up to 1·5 tons unladen weight.

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring in regulations making it compulsory for passengers in the front of heavy goods vehicles or commercial vehicles to wear seat belts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The present seat belt wearing regulations require seat belts to be used by front seat passengers occupying the specified passenger seat of such vehicles as well as by the driver, where they are fitted. A number of manufacturers of heavy goods vehicles already fit seat belts voluntarily as an important safety feature. A European Community directive will require all new HGVs to be fitted with seat belts from 1997. Seat belts have been required to be fitted to the driver's seat and exposed forward facing front seat of coaches and large minibuses since 1 October 1988.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the precise reference to where in the Severn bridge concession agreement the provisions and presumptions about interest charges for the project are covered.

Mr. Chope: Clause 5 and schedule 2—part 4—of the concession agreement with Severn River Crossing plc set out the basis of the financial terms for the project. The detailed provisions relating to interest charges are commercially confidential and are contained in the supporting financial documentation to the agreement.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Severn bridge debt.

Mr. Chope: The net debt on the Severn bridge at 31 March 1990 was £114 million.

M40 (Service Areas)

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what temporary service facilities will now be introduced on the M40 following the rejection of planning permission for motorway service areas.

Mr. Chope: Planning permission has been refused for the motorway service area—MSA—proposed at Tetsworth to serve the southern section of the M40. Two other MSAs are proposed, one at Barn Hill, between junctions 12 and 13, on which a planning decision is awaited; and one at Ardley, at junction 10, for which planning clearance has been obtained. It is hoped to have the Ardley MSA developed and open early in 1993.

In the meantime, signs to the MSAs at Frankley and Hilton Park on the M6 and at Tamworth on the M42 are being modified to indicate that there are no services on the M40. Signs to similar effect are being erected on major approach roads to the M40 such as A34 and A46.

Temporary signs will be erected on the M40 within the next few weeks to indicate the availability of 24-hour fuel facilities off junctions 10 and 15 for emergency use. The general "No services" signing will remain on the motorway.

Agreement in principle has been reached with Warwickshire and Oxfordshire county councils for emergency lavatory facilities to be provided on A542 between junctions 13 and 14 and off junction 10. When these facilities are in place, they, too, will be signed from the motorway.

Road Accidents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the results of traffic-calming measures on accident levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The urban safety project carried out by the transport and road research laboratory indicated that traffic-calming measures can reduce casualties in residential areas by an average of 13 per cent. If this approach were applied nationally, approximately 5 per cent. of all road casualties would be saved.

PRIME MINISTER

Budget Secrecy

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if he will consider loosening pre-Budget secrecy on issues that are not market sensitive.

The Prime Minister: It is already the practice to consult interested parties where appropriate on tax measures for possible inclusion in future Budgets. In this year's Budget, my right hon. Friend announced consultation on at least nine separate issues. In addition, proposals in the Finance Bill are subject to detailed consideration in Committee in the usual way.

Steroids

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Prime Minister what arrangements have existed between the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food over the past four years in preparing prosecutions against people claimed to be dealing illegally in anabolic steroids.

The Prime Minister: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's investigation branch carries out investigations at the request and under the direction of the medicines control agency's—MCA—enforcement unit into persons suspected of dealing illegally in anabolic steroids. On completion of an investigation the MCA, subject to solicitor's advice, decides whether to prosecute.

China

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Government's position regarding the renewal by the United States Government of China's most favoured nation status.

The Prime Minister: Renewal by the United States Government of most favoured nation status for China is of great importance to Hong Kong. We hope that both the House of Representatives and the Senate will give their support to this measure.

Hong Kong's economy is now inextricably linked with that of China. More than two thirds of Chinese exports to the United States are routed through Hong Kong. It has been estimated that non-renewal of China's MFN could result in a loss of some 43,000 Hong Kong jobs, a drop of up to half in Hong Kong's current GDP growth and a loss of US$9 billion to 12 billion in trade. American commercial interest and investment in Hong Kong would also be adversely affected.

There have been some calls for renewal to be made subject to conditions, but this, too, would be bad for Hong Kong. The resulting uncertainty would be a major disincentive to investment in Hong Kong.

Watney Truman Tenants

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Prime Minister what response he has sent to the representations from Watney Truman tenants about notices to quit from Watney's brewery and in particular, the notice to quit to the proprietor of the Plough public house, Coldharbour lane, London SE5.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of representations on this matter. The Government have expressed their concern that certain brewers are issuing notices to quit to their tenants. However, we have received assurances that the purpose of most of these notices is to allow the renegotiation of tenancy agreements. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is keeping in close contact with the brewers and representatives of the tenants on this issue.

WALES

Schools Dental Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of pupils inspected and the number of pupils re-inspected by the school service of the community dental service in 1979 and the most recent available year (a) by authority and (b) for Wales as a whole.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information requested is given in the table.

Pre-school Playgroups

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a tour of Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association groups in east Clwyd.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times he has met Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association leaders.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I met leaders of the Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association at a recent reception at the House of Commons. Officials met leaders of Wales PPA on 1 July, when funding arrangements were discussed.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association leaders at their Wales headquarters.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I have not been invited to do so.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amount of cash given to the Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association in real terms for the last three years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The total amount of grant given to the Wales Pre-School Playgroups Association under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 over the financial year 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 was £417,757. In addition, in 1989-90 and 1990-91, the Gwynedd Pre-School Playgroups Association received grants totalling £8,500 under section 26 of the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976. For 1991-92 the following grants have been offered to the Wales PPA and its county associations.

Under section 28(B)(2) of the National Health Service Act 1977, as amended
Core cost	143,657
Children Act Training	5,500

Royal Welch Fusiliers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the regimental headquarters of the Royal Welch Fusiliers.

Mr. David Hunt: I have not been approached to visit the regimental headquarters of the Royal Welch Fusiliers and have no immediate plans to do so.

Belmont Special School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit Belmont special school, Buckley.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any immediate plans to do so.

Official Visit (America)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the mode of transport used for the recent official visit to north America, its total travel cost, and the evaluation used of the alternatives of private jet hire as against scheduled services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I travelled to and from north America by scheduled air flights. Journeys within north America were undertaken by aeroplane and by car. As soon as the travel costs are known I shall write to the hon. Gentleman. Alternative modes of transport were considered for all journeys and the most practical option chosen in each case.

ENVIRONMENT

Water Treatment

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of Britain's coastline will be designated as less sensitive under the terms of the EC municipal waste water treatment directive.

Mr. Trippier: Less sensitive areas will be identified by the Government on the advice of the relevant regulatory authorities in accordance with the criteria and timetable contained in the directive.

Estate Action Programme

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the annual allocations to the area of the London borough of Hackney through the estate action programme since its inception, and the projects supported.

Mr. Yeo: Since the inception of the estate action (EA) programme the London borough of Hackney has received the following allocations of EA resources for projects in the borough:

		Projects supported
1988-89	£357,000	Clapton Park Estate (Phase I)
1989-90	£932,000	Clapton Park Estate (Phase I) Alexandra National House Fellows Court Estate
1990-91	£984,000	Clapton Park Estate (Phase II) Alexandra National House Fellows Court Estate
1991-92	£1,139,000	Clapton Park Estate (Phase II) Alexandra National House

Further resources of £2,526,000 have been earmarked for works at the Clapton park estate (phases II and III) in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Bird Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the common name of those bird species which require a sales exemption under EC regulation 3626/82, which implements the Convention on Trade in Endangered Species.

Mr. Baldry: I have today placed a copy of the information requested in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the number of cases investigated by his Department of birds offered for sale suspected of not having exemption under EC regulation 3626/82, the number which were subject to legal proceedings and the number which resulted in prosecutions in each of the last three years for which information is available.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's investigations are limited to identifying possible offences, making initial inquiries, and passing information to the police when appropriate. Subsequent investigations are primarily the responsibility of the police, although we keep records of any prosecutions.

The details requested are as follows:

	1989-90	1990-91	1991[1]
Initial inquiries by the Department	86	82	24
Legal proceedings taken by the police	5	4	1
Prosecutions	1	3	—

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an analysis of inter-regional transfers within England in 1990-91 and 1991-92 due to the operation of the uniform business rate, in a similar form to the tables placed in the Library, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, columns 9-10.

Mr. Portillo: The available information is as follows:

	Provisional contributions from Local Authorities to non-dom. rate pool 1990-91 £ million	Receipts from non-domestic rates pool 1990-91 £ million	Provisional contributions from Local Authorities to non-dom. rate pool 1991-92 £ million	Receipts from non-domestic rates pool 1991-92 £ million

Provisional contributions from local authorities to the non-domestic rates pool do not represent the total amounts of non-domestic rates paid to the pool for each region, because

(i) properties on the Central and Crown lists make payments direct to the non-domestic rates pool. It is not known how much of the total yield from these properties relates to each region.

(ii) the provisional contributions made by local authorities to the non-domestic rates pool are calculated on the basis of the rateable value of properties on the local rating list as at 31 December the previous year.

Information about the actual rates payable in respect of 1990-91 is not likely to be available till November 1991.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the average amount each domestic ratepayer was charged to cover the shortfall caused by non-collection in 1989.

Mr. Key: No information is available centrally.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of community charge remaining uncollected in Tower Hamlets in April.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 4 July at column 181.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority in London (a) the number of individuals who are liable to pay community charge and (b) the number who are exempt from the charge distinguished by exemption category.

Mr. Key: The available information on the number of people liable, at 31 March 1991, to make a payment in respect of a personal community charge for each local authority in London is given in the table. For information on the numbers exempt, by exemption category, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 December 1990 at col 267.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the four statutory organisations recently devolved from the Nature Conservancy Council has the lead responsibility for advising Government Departments on the nature conservation implications of offshore licensing.

Mr. Trippier: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee (JNCC) provides advice on nature conservation matters which concern Great Britain as a whole or have international implications. The JNCC is considering whether it should co-ordinate the provision of advice on all offshore licensing applications for gas and oil.

Government Offices (Flags)

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken to ensure the proper display of union flags from Government offices in Whitehall.

Mr. Yeo: My Department issues instructions to other Government Departments about the flying of the union flag on buildings of which they are the sole or principal occupants. These instructions include rules for hoisting flags and the dates and occasions on which this should be done. Individual accommodation officers are responsible for ensuring that the rules are strictly adhered to.

Empty Properties

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the figures for empty properties by tenure for each London borough annually since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities report the number of their own dwellings which were empty at 1 April, and estimates the number of empty dwellings owned by other public sector bodies, housing associations and the private sector, in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1). The available figures for London boroughs appear in the "HIP1 All Items Print" for each year since 1979, at the column references shown as follows:

"HIP1 All Items Print"—column references

	Local Authority	Housing Authority	Other Public Sector[1]	Private Sector

Notes:

[1]Other public sector includes dwellings owned by other boroughs, the GLC (up to 1985), government departments and other public sector agencies.

[2]For 1979 and 1980 there were separate estimates for local authority funded housing association dwellings and others.

Copies of all the documents are in the Library.

Homelessness

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the numbers of people accepted as homeless for each London borough since 1979.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 30 April 1991 at col 511.

Pollution Control

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which organisations have been consulted on the draft Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution internal procedure guidance notes for implementing integrated pollution control; whether he intends to consult more widely on these guidance notes and on the guidelines and criteria which Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will use in enforcing integrated pollution control; and what is his deadline for comments.

Mr. Trippier: The following list indentifies those organisations that have been consulted on the HMIP internal procedures guidance, which will ultimately form the part of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (HMIP) procedures manual. This guidance includes the guidelines and criteria which Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will use in enforcing integrated pollution control.

The consultation has been in two phases. The first phase containing the majority of the guidance material, started on 14 June with comments requested by 12 July. The second phase, consisting of a short three-page note was implemented on 2 July, with replies requested by 29 July.

There are no plans to consult more widely, although any organisation that would like to comment on the guidance documentation is at liberty to request a set through HMIP.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the appointment and composition of the membership of the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Key: Subject to Parliament, the new Local Government Commission will be set up next year. The Secretary of State will appoint its members, and will seek to ensure a balanced membership.

Local Government Boundary Commission

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the names, geographical origins, local government experience and when it was gained, other experience and length of service of each member of the local government Boundary Commission who took part in the local government Boundary Commission's review of Humberside; who were the advisers and researchers; what was the number and duration of visits by the Commission and advisers and researchers to (a) Lincoln, (b) Beverley, (c) Grimsby and (d) Hull in the course of the review; and if he will list the different conclusions in the stages of the review and the voting figures on each.

Mr. Key: The present members of the Commission are Mr. G. J. Ellerton (chairman); Mr. K. F. J. Ennals; Mr. G. R. Prentice; Mrs. H. Sarkany; Mr. C. W. Smith; and Professor K. Young.

Mr. Ellerton served in the colonial service from 1945 ending up as Secretary to the Cabinet in Kenya in 1963. After service as secretary of the Maud and Mallaby Committees on local government and staffing, he joined the Elder Dempster shipping line, becoming chairman from 1972 to 1974. He was later a director of Ocean Transport and Trading Ltd., Overseas Containers Ltd., and chairman of Globe Management Ltd. At the time of his retirement from commerce in 1986, he was a director of Globe Investment Trust.

Mr. Ennals joined the civil service in 1952. After service in the Export Credits Guarantee Department, Department of Economic Affairs, and Ministry of Housing and Local Government he was director, local government directorate, Department of the Environment. He later became director general, Organisation and Establishments (DOE), and, before retirement in 1987, deputy secretary, Finance and Local Government (DOE).

Mr. Prentice began his career in 1952 as an accountant with Hertfordshire county council. He later had assistant county treasurer posts with Cheshire, Nottinghamshire, and Hampshire county councils. From 1970 he was county treasurer, Kesteven county council and from 1974 to 1979, Lincolnshire county council. From 1979 to his retirement in 1983, he was chief executive, Lincolnshire county council.

Mrs. Sarkany held various teaching posts in north London and the USA from 1958 to 1976, later becoming a solicitor in general practice. She is a JP and part-time chairman of a supplementary benefit tribunal.

Mr. Smith trained as a civil engineer and held various posts in local authority planning departments. In 1959 he became county planning officer, East Suffolk county council. In 1971 he became chief executive, East Suffolk county council, and from 1974 until retirement in 1990, chief executive, Suffolk county council.

Professor Young was a research officer at the London School of Economics, 1966-73; research fellow, later senior research fellow, university of Kent, and school for advanced urban studies, university of Bristol. From 1979 to 1987, senior fellow, policy studies institute, during which time (1985-86) he was research director, and adviser, to the Committee on Conduct of Local Authority Business (Widdecombe Committee) and director, Institute of Local Government Studies, university of Birmingham 1987-90. He is now Professor of politics, university of London.

We have no information on the members' birthplaces.

The conduct of the review is, by statute, a matter for the Commission.

Aggregates

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the long-term forecasts of national demand for primary aggregates reproduced as figure 3 in the document "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales Review of MPG6" will be included in the draft revised version of MPG6 when it is published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A decision on the long-term forecasts of national demand for primary aggregates to be published in the draft revision on MPG6 will be taken when we have considered the comments received about the recent forecasts shown in figure 3 in the document "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales—Review of MPG6".

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the long-term forecasts of national demand for primary aggregates recently published by his Department in "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales Review of MPG6" will be subject to further review in the light of comments on the forecasts received by his Department.

Mr. Yeo: We welcome comments on the recently published forecasts and these will be carefully considered before any decision on whether there should be a review of the present forecasts.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the regional aggregates working parties will be preparing new regional commentaries on the basis of the revised forecasts and resulting regional apportionments based on the AM89 survey.

Mr. Yeo: A regional apportionment of the recently published forecasts based on the results of the AM89 survey has been made available to the regional aggregates working parties (RAWPS) as advice which they may wish to take into account as they prepare their regional commentaries. It is also open to the RAWPS to prepare regional commentaries using their own assessment of possible long-term future regional demand.

Minerals Act 1981 (Review)

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) in undertaking the review of the Minerals Act 1981, what place has been allowed for representation for the minerals industry, local authorities and statutory and non-statutory conservation organisations;

(2) what are the terms of reference for the review now being carried out by his Department of the Minerals Act 1981;

(3) what steps he is taking to consult representatives of voluntary conservation organisations as part of the review of the Minerals Act 1981.

Mr. Yeo: The Government announced in the White Paper on the Environment "This Common Inheritance" their intention to review the operation of the provisions introduced by the Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981, and the compensation arrangements under it. That review is underway and will consider:

—the nature and extent of the problem, including old permissions, particularly interim development order permissions, and historic dereliction.

—the effectiveness of the provisions of the 1981 Act and associated regulations in dealing with these problems, including reviews of mineral working sites, order making powers, level of compensation, and restoration and aftercare conditions.

—whether there are solutions or approaches outside the current legislation, including restoration bonds and/or levies.

As I stated in reply to a question by the hon. Member on 17 June, the review is being undertaken by officials with the assistance of a small informal working group comprising three representatives of the County Planning Officers Society and three representatives of the minerals industry. The review, which is already underway, is examining the technical details of the provisions. The Government have no plans to change the membership of the working group. However, interested bodies are welcome to submit representations, and any proposed changes arising from the review will be the subject of full public consultation, including environmental and amenity groups, before decisions are taken.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Emergency Planning

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by location for London the authorities that have developed emergency control centres; and how many (a) emergency planning officers and (b) clerical support staff for emergency planning officers are employed by each borough.

Mr. John Patten: According to the most recent information provided by London authorities, the following have developed emergency centres:

Hillingdon	Islington
City of London	Westminster
Waltham Forest	Barking
Merton	Hackney
Richmond	Havering

Bromley	Newham
Bexley	Redbridge
Brent	Tower Hamlets
Hammersmith	Kingston
Harrow	Lambeth
Hounslow	Sutton
Kensington	Wandsworth
Barnet	Croydon
Camden	Greenwich
Enfield	Lewisham
Haringey	Southwark

Details of emergency planning staff employed by the London boroughs are not held centrally.

TV Purchases

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East on 27 June, Official Report, column 509, whether he has any proposals to ensure that the BBC does not gain commercial advantage from the monopolistic information it received concerning television purchases since 1 April or to ensure that such information is made available to other organisations who may wish to use it for commercial purposes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I explained in my answer of 27 June the use made of television licensing records created after 31 March 1991 is a matter for the BBC, not the Secretary of State. It is always open for people to approach the Data Protection Registrar if they believe the BBC's use of computerised records contravenes the Data Protection Act, or the Director General of Fair Trading if they consider the BBC are unfairly exploiting a monopoly position.

Bingo

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his consideration of the gaming board's recommendation of the relaxation of regulations on the advertising of bingo.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have recently completed our consideration of the gaming board's advice on the scope for partial relaxation of the controls, in section 42 of the Gaming Act 1968, on the advertising of licensed bingo clubs. We have concluded that there is a case for relaxing the controls on print advertising, provided there is a prohibition on all advertising of prizes away from club premises so as to prevent undue emphasis being placed on the gambling rather than the social aspects of the clubs. We do not believe that bingo advertising on local radio should be permitted. We will be writing to the Bingo Association of Great Britain in the near future to invite their views on these proposals.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will recommend the grant of a posthumous pardon to Derek Bentley.

Mr. John Patten: Representations made in this case are still under consideration.

United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the 1991-92 grant to UKIAS; and what is the proposed grant in 1992-93.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office grant-in-aid to UKIAS for 1991-92 set at the beginning of the year amounted to £1,467 million. The further amounts to be paid in this and subsequent years as a result of the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 2 July will be determined in the light of discussions with the organisation.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with UKIAS with a view to that organisation providing legal advice and assistance in respect of immigration and asylum cases.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of whether the proposed additional resources for UKIAS will enable that organisation to send representatives to interviews with immigration officers, to provide interpreters, to obtain medical reports and to attend police stations and posts in relation to political asylum cases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In the light of the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 2 July, Home Office officials are discussing with UKIAS the implications for its workload and organisation and the extra resources needed. Those discussions include the range of additional functions which the service will be asked to undertake as a result of the changes announced last week.

Police Vehicles (Blue Lights)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions exist on the use of devices that emit blue light on police vehicles that are not (i) warning beacons or (ii) special warning lamps.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Apart from the rules on warning beacons and special warning lamps, the only restriction under the Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1989 on the use of other devices which emit blue light on police vehicles is that they must not be used so as to cause undue dazzle or discomfort to other road users.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telephone Systems

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many call line identification telephone systems have been installed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Any equipment that is to be connected to the public telephone network first has to be approved. At present no equipment has been approved that would enable customers to have calling line identification for telephone calls over the public network.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the Director of OFTEL about the introduction of the call line identification telephone system to the United Kingdom as a security measure against nuisance telephone calls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My Department is in touch with OFTEL about the possible introduction of calling line identification (CLI) in the United Kingdom. This raises a number of issues including the need for a telephone call to be carried via a digital exchange at both ends and the requirement for new equipment to be approved before it is connected to the public telephone network. OFTEL expects to publish a consultation paper on CLI later this year.

Video Telephones

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many video-telephones have been installed in the United Kingdom; what areas of the United Kingdom has video-phone cable network installed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: All terminal equipment that is to be connected to the public switched telephone network first has to be approved. No video-telephones have been submitted for approval in the United Kingdom. Technically it is possible to have video-telephones that can operate on the standard telephone network.

Inner Cities Programme

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the annual allocations to the area of the London borough of Hackney through his Department's inner cities programme since its inception, and the projects supported.

Mr. Leigh: No projects in the London borough of Hackney have so far been supported by the Government's inner cities task forces.

On 9 May last, I announced that we would open a task force in Hackney later this year. Programme expenditure in 1991-92 will be set in consultation with the task force leader when he or she is appointed, but spend in a full financial year is usually of the order of £1 million.

Soft Drinks

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what consideration has been given to the implications on the soft drinks industry of the findings of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of carbonated soft drinks;

(2) what representations he has received on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of carbonated soft drinks;

(3) when he expects to publish the findings of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of carbonated soft drinks;

(4) what period of consultation he will give the drinks industry and other interested parties after publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of carbonated soft drinks.

Mr. Redwood: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on carbonated drinks is currently being considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The report will be published as quickly as is practicable.

The contents of all MMC reports remain confidential until publication. If the MMC finds no adverse effects the Secretary of State has no power to act. If the MMC has reached any adverse findings he will decide what steps, if any, should be taken to remedy the situation. He will also consider whether or not to announce a period of consultation before reaching his conclusions.

The Secretary of State does not receive representations before an MMC report has been published. Interested parties have had the opportunity to put views directly to the MMC. The Secretary of State's decision is based on the full examination and analysis contained in the MMC report. It would be inappropriate for his view to be influenced by representations from particular interest groups, since, while the report remains confidential, he is unable to seek views of others on the same points.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people are employed in the United Kingdom soft drinks industry.

Mr. Redwood: Latest published figures show that employment in the United Kingdom soft drinks manufacturing industry (SIC 4283) was 17,400 in September 1989.

Auditing Practices Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library his Department's response to the CCAB Ltd. report on the restructuring of the Auditing Practices Board.

Mr. Redwood: Copies of my Department's press notice welcoming the proposals for the new Auditing Practices Board have been placed in the Library.

Company Pension Funds

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review (a) the treatment of company pension funds in company accounts and (b) the control of the assets of such pension funds.

Mr. Redwood: The accounting treatment of company contributions to pension funds is dealt with by SSAP 24 issued in 1988 by the Accounting Standards Committee. In due course, the Accounting Standards Board will be reviewing SSAP 24 as part of its programme of reviewing all standards in existence when the board was created. The control of pension fund assets is the responsibility of the trustees, who have a fiduciary duty to act in the best interests of the members of the scheme in accordance with the deeds and rules. It is for them to take any action necessary to protect the fund's assets.

Company Accounts

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to review the present treatment of leasing in company accounts; and what provision is currently made in respect of such treatment to allow fair comparison between company performances by investors.

Mr. Redwood: Accounting standards are intended to foster greater comparability among company accounts. Accounting for leases is dealt with in statement of standard accounting practice 21 (SSAP21) issued by the Accounting Standards Committee in 1984 and, together with all other then existing standards, adopted by the Accounting Standards Board (ASB) on its formation in August 1990. The ASB announced then that it would, in due course, review all those standards. My Department has drawn the attention of the ASB to several points which will need to be considered when SSAP 21 is reviewed.

Open-ended Investment Companies

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about proposals received from the Unit Trust Association for legislation facilitating the creation of open-ended investment companies.

Mr. Redwood: I am still awaiting the Unit Trust Association's proposals.

Arms Industries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Clywd, South-West (Mr. Jones) Official Report, 27 June, column 524, information on arms conversion to non-arms production is collected by (a) any executive agency of his Department or (b) in any compilation of regional statistics.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1991]: Information on arms conversion is not systematically collected by any executive agency, or published in any official compilation of regional statistics.

"Markets for Environmental Monitoring Instrumentation"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many copies of his Department's report, "Markets for Environmental Monitoring Instrumentation" have been printed and at what cost; and to whom copies have been distributed.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The publishing rights for this report were passed to HMSO. The DTI did not therefore incur any costs in relation to the publication of the report nor take any decision as to the number of copies printed. However, a number of pre-publication copies of the report were provided to GAMBICA, the monitoring equipment manufacturers trade association, in view of the considerable assistance it provided towards the report's preparation.

The report is available, at a cost of £22, through local HMSO outlets.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sri Lanka

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account has been taken of Sri Lanka's human rights record in reaching decisions on aid.

Mrs. Chalker: We announced in October 1990 that we were delaying implementation of a £3 million pledge of programme aid pending a review of all relevant factors, including Sri Lanka's human rights performance.

This review has now been carried out, and our conclusion is that, despite some encouraging steps taken by the Sri Lanka Government earlier this year, the overall satisfactory human rights situation has not improved significantly. I have therefore decided to withdraw the offer of programme aid.

Existing project aid, including technical assistance and relief activities, will continue. However, we have made it clear that any major new aid commitments will be reviewed in the light of the human rights situation.

Tropical Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to propose to the forthcoming Group of Seven summit a policy for a clear commitment to cease support of multilateral and bilateral aid that causes unsustainable damage to intact tropical forests.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The Government believe that multilateral and bilateral aid should not support unsustainable activities in tropical forests. They take every opportunity to make this position clear and are prepared to do so, if necessary, at the summit.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the development of a legally binding global instrument to conserve the world's forests;

(2) what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken towards facilitating the establishment of an international instrument on forests, to be signed in Brazil at the Earth Summit in 1992.

Mrs. Chalker [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The Government support proposals for a statement of principles on the management of the world's forests which is to be endorsed by world leaders at the UN conference on Environment and Development (UNCED) in Brazil in June 1992. The Government are also grateful for the agreement of a legally binding instrument thereafter. We are engaged in discussions with a wide variety of developed and developing countries in the context of the preparations for the UNCED towards this end.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income Support

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of people receiving income support who, at the time the award was made, were living in the postcode areas covering Tower Hamlets;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the number of families receiving family credit who, at the time the award was made, were living in the postcode areas covering Tower Hamlets.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information in relation to income support is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Mr. Bichard will write to the hon. Member with the information in relation to family credit, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Housing and Community Charge Benefits

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table reconciling for the years 1985-86 to 1990-91 the figures for England, Scotland and Wales for housing and community charge benefits, as given in table 3 of Cm. 1514, with those for housing benefits, as given in the Official Report, 28 March, column 516.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to publish such a table because the information given in column 516 of the Official Report for 28 March was taken from the 1989 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 621), and is based on local authority returns which are subject to adjustment. The information given in table 3 of the departmental report (Cm. 1514), is more recent and therefore includes subsequent adjustments.

Departmental Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff were in post on the date that each agency in his Department was established as an executive agency; and how many staff are in post now.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is in the table.

	On establishment	At 1 June 1991	Date established
Resettlement Agency	540	505	24 May 1989
Information Technology Services Agency	2,996	3,732	2 April 1990
Contributions Agency	7,171	7,255	10 April 1991
Benefits Agency	65,604	64,979	10 April 1991

Note: Figures are whole time equivalent permanent staff only.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list new facilities for staff including nurseries and health care schemes which have been introduced in each agency in his Department since its establishment as an executive agency.

Miss Widdecombe: The Benefits Agency has opened three workplace nurseries in Brixton, Hinchley Wood and Newcastle Upon Tyne. The Newcastle nursery is a joint venture with the Contributions Agency and Information Technology Services Agency. The Information Technology Services Agency has introduced a holiday playscheme at Lytham St. Annes.

In regard to healthcare schemes all staff aged 35 and over employed in the Department's executive agencies are to be offered the opportunity of a comprehensive health screen, including lifestyle counselling, concentrating on the main causes of premature death in the United Kingdom, coronary heart disease, and breast and cervical cancer.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into each agency in his Department since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will publish a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern.

Miss Widdecombe: The Information Technology Services Agency has introduced two new forms of alternative working patterns: (a) recurring temporary appointments and (b) short notice appointments. These cater respectively for staff contracted to work for short periods each year, and for staff employed at short notice and usually for a short period. To date the only such appointments made relate to two executive officers employed on a recurring temporary appointments basis.

The Benefits Agency, the Contributions Agency and the Resettlement Agency have not introduced any new forms of alternative working patterns since their inception as executive agencies.

Mortgages

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total amount paid by central Government through social security payments to home owners in mortgage interest payments each year since 1975-76 at (a) real and (b) 1990 costings.

Miss Widdecombe: Estimates of amounts included for mortgage interest in the assessment of supplementary benefit and, from 1988, income support, are given in the table:

	Number of claimants	Average weekly payment (£)	Total payment per annum (£ million)
			Current	1990 prices
1975	98,000	3·93	20	68
1976	123,000	4·22	27	80
1977	124,000	5·12	33	87
1978	105,000	4·81	26	63
1979	98,000	5·96	31	64
1980	134,000	10·18	71	128
1981	196,000	12·18	124	200
1982	235,000	13·87	170	260
1983	242,000	11·93	150	218
1984	277,000	15·18	219	304
1986	356,000	18·96	351	458
1987	334,000	19·31	335	415
1988	200,000	18·33	286	340
1989	281,000	24·18	353	387

Source: Annual Statistical Enquiries.

Notes: Figures for numbers of claimants are rounded to the nearest 100,000.
Figures from 1983 onwards are not comparable with earlier figures because they were collected on a different basis.
Current prices are inflated to 1990 price level by use of the RPI index.
In 1985 no Enquiry was undertaken.
The 1990 Enquiry will be published shortly.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of paying mortgage interest payments in full for the first 16 weeks of an income support claim.

Miss Widdecombe: The cost in 1989, the latest year for which annual statistical inquiry information is available, is estimated at about £35 million.

Child Benefit

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will arrange for the Benefits Agency to consider analysing child benefit payments for lone and two-parent households by post code and publishing the statistics by local authority area.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies he received from my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 5 July at columns 220-21. The information is not available.

HEALTH

Residential Care Homes

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued by his Department on the employment of placement officers whose role it is to make decisions on the transfer of people from the national health service to independent nursing homes.

Mr. Dorrell: In 1989 the Department issued health circular (89)5 together with an accompanying booklet, copies of which are available in the Library. This gave health authorities general guidance on procedures and arrangements for the discharge of patients from hospital. Employment of placement officers is a matter for local decision.

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial support is available to residents living in private residential care homes for the mentally ill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: People in private residential care homes can claim income support and other social security benefits. Apart from this, local authorities can offer financial support at their discretion to residents under pensionable age by meeting any shortfall between the charge made by the care home and the individual's ability to pay, taking any benefit entitlement into account. Authorities must however meet in full the cost of providing or arranging residential care under section 21 of the National Assistance Act 1948 offset only by charges levied on residents under the terms of that Act.

NHS Employment

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were employed by the National Health Service in 1961; and how many are employed today.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest—provisional—figures show that 797,300 whole-time equivalent staff were employed by the hospital and community health services in England at 30 September 1990, compared with 629,500 at 30 September 1971, the earliest year for which comparable figures are available.

Occupational Health Nurses

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of occupational health nurses working in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The latest available—provisional—figures relate to the position at 30 September 1990. On that date there were 610 occupational health nurses employed in the hospital and community health services in England. Figures are not collected by the Department for occupational health nurses working elsewhere.

Oral Health

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to launch a campaign to improve oral health.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 9 May that up to £750,000 would be made available from the Department of Health to support oral health education projects in 1991-92. More than £1 million has already been spent in support of such projects since the publication of the White Paper "Promoting Better Health". Departmental funds will be used to support innovative local projects and to disseminate examples of good practice. Several proposals are currently under consideration and we shall be interested to receive others.

School Milk

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to reintroduce free milk for all school children.

Mr. Dorrell: We have no plans to reintroduce free milk for all school children. Local authorities already have the powers to provide milk at midday free of charge to children of families in receipt of income support. This together with the provisions available under the welfare food scheme ensures that the children in most need receive a quota of free milk each day.

NHS Trust

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration he gives to the stated opposition to trust status of a hospital within a district health authority in his consideration of an application for trust status by that authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: An application for trust status may be made involving a number of units; such an application is subject to the normal public consultation and, while no group has a veto, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider carefully all responses received.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is being collected by his Department on the operation of national health service trusts.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department will be collecting the necessary information to monitor the performance of trusts against their three key financial duties—to achieve a 6 per cent. rate of return on net assets, to break even taking one year with another and to keep within their external financing limit. It will also be collecting certain items of information from trusts, as from all NHS provider units on manpower, activity and waiting lists.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidance relating to the publication of business plans to those hospitals and units submitting applications to become national health service trusts in April 1992.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department is currently revising its guidance in this area. Although the financial pro formas prepared by units applying for second wave trust status will be submitted to the Department in confidence, trusts will be asked to publish business plans for 1992-93.

Health Authority Staff (Transfers)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to health authorities relating to the transfer of staff from health authority employment to local authority employment in preparation for implementation of part III of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None, but any necessary guidance will be issued in good time to allow health authorities to implement it by the time part III, including section 49, of the National Health Service Act 1990 comes into operation in 1993.

Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) privately registered homes, (b) voluntary registered homes and (c) local authority homes for the elderly there were in Tower Hamlets for each year since 1979; and how many residents there were in each of those years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information readily available for the period refers to homes catering primarily for elderly people or younger people who are physically handicapped and is given in the table. Information is not available for 1979 and 1980. Detailed information, including information on homes catering primarily for elderly people is available, from 1987, in the annual publication "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People: All residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes (RA/2)", a copy of which is available in the Library.

The number of homes and residents aged over 65 in residential homes primarily for elderly people and younger people who are physically handicapped, by sector, Tower Hamlets:

1989	8	4	0	300	117	0
1990	7	4	0	271	118	0

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner budget holders are now established in Tower Hamlets health authority; and what percentage of the population they cover.

Mr. Dorrell: I understand from the chairman of the North East Thames regional health authority that there are no general practices presently participating in GP fundholding within the area of Tower Hamlets district health authority.

Mental Handicap Nursing Service

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what examination has been made of the compatibility of the planned discontinuation of the community mental handicap nursing service in Somerset with the guidelines issued by his Department in association with the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has made specific inquiries to satisfy itself that people in Somerset with learning disabilities will continue to receive the care they need, within the terms of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and departmental guidance.

Psittacosis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those health authorities in which psittacosis is a notifiable disease; if he will indicate the most common ways in which psittacosis is transmitted; and how far its transmission can be controlled.

Mr. Dorrell: Psittacosis is an acute infection with variable clinical symptoms such as fever and respiratory infection. It is usually acquired by inhaling the bacterium from desiccated droppings and secretions of infected birds in an enclosed space or directly from infected birds. Household birds are a source of infection. Turkeys, ducks and pigeons are occasionally responsible for human disease. It is, however, a very rare disease. Control methods include regulating the importation of birds and the maintenance of good standards of hygiene and rearing by owners.

Psittacosis is a notifiable disease only in the districts covered by East and South Cambridgeshire district councils.

NHS Evaluation

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those organisations outside Government Departments commissioned to carry out evaluation programmes of the national health service; and when the results of these studies are likely to be published.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not collected centrally.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial resources are being allocated to any national health service evaluation programmes (a) currently in operation and (b) planned for the future.

Mr. Dorrell: The NHS research and development strategy, now being developed, will pay particular attention to the cost-effective use of resources and the introduction of improved methods of health care.

The information currently available centrally, which relates to evaluations of cost-effectiveness of health technologies financed from the Department's existing health and personal social services research programme is as follows:

Existing work title	Total costs £
1. Screening for foot problems in patients with diabetes	58,798
2. Hormone replacement therapy	79,814
3. Ultra sound screening in abdominal aortic aneurism	89,063
4. Breast cancer screening	1,284,000
5. Laser technologies in medical care	91,530
6. New technologies in general practice	301,899
7. Percutaneous nucleotomy compared to lumbar microdiscectomy in lumbar disc disease	87,840

Part III Homes

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on local authorities' continuing responsibilities for (a) residents of local authority part III homes which are closed down, (b) former residents of part III homes which were transferred to the private or voluntary sector before 25 June and (c) former residents of part III homes which are transferred to the private or voluntary sector between 25 June and the date on which directions issued under section 21(1) of the National Assistance Act 1948 and paragraph 2 of schedule 8 to the National Health Service Act 1977 take effect.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Local authorities have, and will continue to have a statutory duty to provide residential accommodation for people in need of care and attention which is not otherwise available. This duty is not affected by any arrangements local authorities may make to transfer or close their residential care homes.

Where residential accommodation previously provided under part III of the National Assistance Act 1948 is transferred to the private or voluntary sector the extent of the local authorities' continuing responsibility for residents in these homes currently depends upon the terms on which the transfer was made. It is our intention that the status of people who are resident in homes which are transferred after the introduction of the proposed directions will remain unchanged by the transfer, in that the full cost of the accommodation and care will continue to be the responsibility of the local authority which placed them there, subject to the relevant charging provisions.

Health Service Commissioner (Annual Report)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the annual report of the Health Service Commissioner for 1990-91.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Health Service Commissioner has, as in previous years, made a report on the performance of his functions in England, Scotland and Wales.

My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Scotland and the Secretary of State for Wales and I presented the report to the House on 28 June.

It was published on 2 July (HC536) and copies are available from the Vote Office.

OPCS Staff (Confidentiality)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what steps have been taken to ensure that all staff in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys are covered by the additional confidentiality provisions inserted into the Census Act 1920 by the Census (Confidentiality) Act 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Registrar General for England and Wales has designated the office of director of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for the purposes of section 8 of the Census Act 1920 as amended. The post of director of OPCS is the other office that the registrar general holds. Its designation has ensured that all staff who are or have been under his control, and all those people who provided or have provided services to him, are now bound by the confidentiality provisions of the Census Act 1920 as amended if they have access to any personal census data. This applies whether they work or have worked for him as registrar general or as director of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Sleeping Rough

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people sleeping rough were counted in the 1991 census in England and Wales.

Mr. Dorrell: The Registrar General for England and Wales informs me that 2,703 people—1,275 in London and 1,428 elsewhere—were counted as sleeping rough on the night of 21 to 22 April 1991 at 444 sites which had been identified beforehand by voluntary organisations, local authorities, and churches. These sites, spread throughout the country, were visited by specially recruited enumerators, many of whom also worked for voluntary organisations. The count does not include those who spent census night in a hostel or shelter or some other form of accommodation, but who occasionally sleep rough; nor does it include any people who slept rough on census night but not on identified sites. Some of these will have been counted as part of the normal enumeration.

The corresponding figures for sites in individual local authority areas will be published around the end of July in a census monitor. Final figures for local areas, including any people sleeping rough who were enumerated away from the identified sites, will be given in the series of county reports scheduled for publication between December 1991 and October 1992. Those reports will include information about the age and sex of people sleeping rough.

Steroids

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each of the past four years for which figures are available, the numbers of prosecutions brought by his Department against people claimed to be dealing illegally in anabolic steroids; and at which level of the courts such cases were pursued.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Prosecutions	Court
1990	One (7 charges)	Magistrates
1989	Two (2 charges)	Magistrates
1989	Two (10 charges)	Crown
1988	Two (48 charges)	Crown
1987	Three (3 charges)	Crown

Fluoridation

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the water authorities which have agreed to a request from a health authority to supply floridated water.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 14 June at columns 721-22 and the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 27 June at column 547.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the health authorities in which (a) the whole and (b) part of the authority's population receives fluoridated water.

Mr. Dorrell: The latest information relates to 1988 when a survey of artificial fluoride levels in England was conducted by the British Fluoridation Society. Table 1 lists the district health authority areas where all the population received water artificially fluoridated to at least 0·9 ppm. Table 2 shows those districts where some of the population received water artificially fluoridated to that level.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the details of the request by the national health service management executive to regional health authorities to lend money to two of the Thames regional health authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Details of the NHS management executive's discussions with regional NHS management are not normally published.

Hexachlorocyclomexanes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the implication for human health of hexachlorocyclomexanes; and what exposure limits there are.

Mr. Dorrell: The Department has been advised by the Committee on Toxicity and the Committee on the Safety of Medicines and has taken account also of the advice of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides, the joint meeting on pesticide residues—JMPR—convened by the World Health Organisation, and the International Agency for Research on Cancer.

The only hexachlorocyclohexane currently available for use in approved products with insecticidal properties in the United Kingdom is the gamma isomer more commonly known as lindane. Little information is available, and no occupational exposure limits are set, for the other isomers. Exposure limits for pesticide residues in food are determined on the basis of the acceptable daily intake—ADI. The United Kingdom has accepted on health grounds, the ADI for lindane of 0 to 0·008 mg per kg of body weight set by the JMPR in 1989. Worker exposure levels set, by the Health and Safety Commission, are 0·5 mg per cu m of air for eight hours time weighted average —TWA—for long-term exposures and 1·5 mg per cu m of air for 10 minutes TWA for brief exposures. Low concentrations are used as an insecticide in licensed medicinal products for external use.

NHS Employees

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the percentage change in the number of administrative and clerical staff in the national health service in England between September 1979 and the latest available date.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Between 30 September 1979 and 30 September 1990 the number of administrative and clerical staff, including managerial staff, in the hospital and community health services in England increased by 26 per cent. to 129,700 whole-time equivalents. Within this overall rise, the greatest increase was among staff who work in direct support of clinicians whose numbers rose by 269 per cent. to 40,620 whole-time equivalents.

Centre for Applied Microbiological Research

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (a) when he expects to reach a conclusion on the future of the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research, Porton Down and (b) when his Department's current review of the future of the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research commenced.

Mr. Dorrell: I expect to make an announcement very shortly about the future of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research—CAMR. The latest review of the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research commenced in April 1989 and led to several detailed studies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Director of Works

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will set out the series of procedures by which the Director of Works of the Palace of Westminster is to be appointed.

Mr. Beith: An internal public service trawl was conducted in late January and early February. The 17 potential candidates revealed by this method were considered insufficient in both number and qualifications to form the pool from which a successful candidate for this important post should be selected. The Commission therefore decided in February that the net should be cast wider by employing management consultants both to advertise the post and to identify further candidates by search. As a result of these latter exercises, a total of about 85 serious candidates was identified.

A group consisting of senior officers of both Houses, the Department of the Environment and the Civil Service Commission sifted all applications, with the assistance of the management consultants, in mid-April, and in early May the final shortlist was interviewed by a board including the Serjeant at Arms and Black Rod, a former Director General of Property Holdings and a senior vice-president of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors. The board was chaired by a former chief valuer of the board of Inland Revenue.

The Commission agreed in March that the post of Director of Works should, like a number of other senior appointments in the House of Commons service, be made by Mr. Speaker, but in view of the intention that the director will serve both Houses it was also agreed that Mr. Speaker should consult the Lord Chairman of Committees before making his decision. In the light of the advice of the interview board, and after duly consulting the Lord Chairman, the appointment by Mr. Speaker of Mr. Henry Webber as the first Director of Works was announced on 27 June.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

New Parliamentary Building

Sir David Steel: To ask the Lord President of the Council what criteria are being used in the allocation of rooms to Members and staff in the new Parliament street building; and when he expects the allocation to be made.

Mr. MacGregor: The New Building Sub-Committee resolved at its meeting on 21 May 1991 that the allocation of offices in phase 1 as between Members of political parties should be on the following basis:

Second Floor:	offices for Labour (or other Opposition party) Members
Third Floor:	offices for Conservative Members
Fourth Floor:	offices to be divided between Labour (or other Opposition party) and Conservative Members
Fifth Floor:	offices for Conservative Members
Sixth Floor:	offices for Labour (or other Opposition party) Members.

Individual offices will be allocated to Members by the accommodation Whips of the Government and official Opposition parties on behalf of the Services Committee in the usual way.

European Study

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Lord President of the Council if there are any proposals to offer hon. Members who serve on European Standing Committees the opportunity to study the operations of the European Parliament, the European Commission and the Council of Ministers; what plans there are to arrange any study visits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: There are no such proposals for Members in their capacity as members of the European Standing Committees.

Recycling and Energy Saving

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give consideration to implementing a policy of (a) recycling aluminium cans and (b) using ozone-friendly sprays where possible; and if he will make a statement on his general policies regarding recycling and energy saving measures within the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The authorities of both Houses have been in consultation about arrangements for the collection of used aluminium cans. Although this does pose practical problems, the matter is to be considered by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee.

The Departments responsible for cleaning the House and the parliamentary estate and the contracted cleaners are required to use cleaning materials which are environmentally acceptable. It is understood that this requirement governs the products themselves and, where appropriate, their propellants.

Both Houses co-operate to promote practicable recycling measures. At present, this includes the collection of waste paper and bottles, which are recycled in accordance with the terms of a parliamentary works office contract; and the supply of a wide range of stationery products made from recycled paper.

Energy conservation work is treated both as a specific task and as an integral part of both the maintenance of the fabric of the buildings and services on the parliamentary estate and the design of new facilities. During the year the coverage of the building energy management system will be extended, further energy efficient lighting will be installed, another major step in the modernisation of the heating system will be completed and other minor work will be carried out as the opportunity arises.

Staff of the parliamentary works office have a continuing brief to draw the attention of energy liaison officers where lighting is left on repeatedly, and security staff are asked to switch off lighting in empty rooms. It is, of course, incumbent upon all occupants of the parliamentary buildings to adopt a commonsense approach to the use of lighting and other energy-consuming equipment.

Lords Amendments

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to conduct the trial to cover the proposals in the second report of the Procedure Select Committee for Session 1990-91 to deal with the documents required for Commons consideration of amendments from the Lords to Bills when they are considered by the House.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 5 June 1991, c. 234]: I propose to extend the operational trial to include all Bills returning from the Lords until the House rises for the Summer adjournment.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dioxins

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 2 July, Official Report, column 132, to what guideline figure on the levels of dioxins in milk and other foodstuffs, in nanogrammes per kg, his Ministry was working prior to setting the level at 0·7 nanogrammes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In 1989, in the absence of any international evaluation, the Committee of Toxicity established a guideline level of 0·002 nanogrammes per kg bodyweight per day to assess intakes of dioxins from milk and other foodstuffs. This guideline was not a safety limit and has been superseded by the tolerable daily intake or 0·01 nanogrammes per kg bodyweight per day recommend by the World Health Organisation in 1990 from which the action level of 0·07 nanogrammes per kg of milk was calculated.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will supply the information as to the 27 locations in the Bolsover and North Derbyshire area where monitoring took place in respect of dioxin levels in milk.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 1 July at column 73.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will meet representatives of farmers affected by dioxin levels in milk to discuss arrangements for payment to the farmers affected.

Mr. Maclean: On the question of compensation, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 2 July at column 133.

Blue Ear Pig Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether restrictions have now been imposed as a result of blue ear disease in each of the counties listed in his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields on 24 June, Official Report, column 383.

Mr. Gummer: Restrictions as a result of suspected or confirmed disease have been imposed in, among the counties listed, County Durham, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, north Yorkshire, and west Yorkshire. Elsewhere, since 13 June restrictions have been imposed on premises which had received pigs from infected or suspect holdings in the previous 56 days.

Cetaceans

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from Greenpeace and the Whale and Dolphin Conservation Society on the dangers to small cetaceans.

Mr. Curry: I met representatives of these organisations together with other members of Wildlife Link on 4 July and discussed our mutual concern about the dangers to small cetaceans from high seas drift nets.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what investigations have been carried out in each of the past 10 years of the numbers of cetaceans that have been caught by drift nets in the waters of (a) Britain and (b) other EEC countries.

Mr. Curry: Reliable historical information on the number of incidental by-catches by EC vessels is not available. However, following a United Kingdom initiative the North sea states have agreed a co-operative framework for the conservation of small cetaceans, including a commitment to develop schemes to monitor incidental catches more closely. In addition, the United Kingdom is supporting an EC proposal to ban drift nets above 2·5 km in length, to guard against their possible indiscriminate operation.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many visits have been made to farmers by ADAS staff to give free advice to farmers on pollution avoidance for each year since 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Statistics on the number of visits to farms to give free advice on farm-related pollution matters are being collected with effect from 1 April 1991. Information in this form is not available for previous years.

Irradiated Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether food containing irradiated spices is required to be labelled as containing irradiated ingredients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Under The Food Labelling (Amendment) (Irradiated Food) Regulations 1990, which came into force on 1 January 1991, all irradiated prepacked foods and listed food ingredients, including herbs and spices, are required to carry an indication on the label that they have been irradiated, using the words "irradiated" or "treated with ionising radiation". Similar provisions apply to non-prepacked foods. In the case of foods sold in catering establishments, for practical reasons, a general statement is permitted for herbs and spices to the effect that food sold in the establishment contains, or may contain, irradiated seasonings.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Fisheries Council held in Brussels on 8 July.

Mr. Curry: I attended the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Brussels on 8 July 1991 together with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Scottish Office.

In the Council's key discussion on improved technical conservation measures I made clear the importance of urgent action; particularly in the North sea and west of Scotland to safeguard cod and haddock stocks. I drew attention to the measures the United Kingdom introduced unilaterally on 1 July to require the use of 90 mm square mesh panels and the substantial benefit it will have particularly in reducing discards of young haddock. I am pleased that it is now wholly accepted that EC measures are needed. For the North sea and west of Scotland it is clear that the only possible basis for an agreement on mesh sizes is a minimum diamond mesh of 100 mm with a 90 mm square mesh panel option. In addition, there is widespread support for an increase to 80 mm in the Irish sea, a change which our industry has been seeking for some time, and for a number of other improvements mainly designed to reduce wasteful catches of fish not yet ready for the market plus some simplifications of existing EC rules.

I called for urgent agreement on measures to control the use of extensive drift nets and supported the length limit of 2·5 km proposed by the Commission. While recognising that EC fleets do not engage in the sort of large scale indiscriminate drift netting which prompted the 1989 United Nations resolution, I stressed the importance of the EC showing its support for the international effort to curb such fishing.

I am pleased that there was a clear commitment from the Council and the Commission to make every effort to enable final decisions on drift nets and technical conservation measures to be taken at a special Council which is to be held in late October or early November.

DEFENCE

Army Recruits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of Army recruits comes from (a) Wales, (b) England, (c) Scotland, (d) Northern Ireland and (e) elsewhere.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1990-91, the proportion of regular Army recruits from each country was:

(a) Wales 7·0 per cent.;
(b) England 79·0 per cent.;
(c) Scotland 11·0 per cent.;
(d) Northern Ireland 2·0 per cent.; and
(e) Elsewhere 1·0 per cent.

The Gulf

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest assessment of the effects on British service men of chemical and biological reagents released in Iraq during the recent hostilities.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The tactics used in attacking Iraqi chemical and biological facilities during the Gulf conflict were designed to minimise the risk of contamination outside the sites. We are not aware of any releases of chemical or biological reagents in Iraq outside such facilities.

SCOTLAND

Mental Illness Grant

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the level of mental illness specific grant taken up by each local authority in the current year;

(2) what level of funding has been allocated to the mental illness specific grant in Scotland for the current year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 5 July at columns 235-36.

Community Care

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how he plans to monitor the use local authorities make of funds allocated for community care to ensure that the money is not used to fund other local authority services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department will shortly be consulting local authorities and other interested parties, including health boards and relevant voluntary organisations, on a draft circular detailing the proposed arrangements for monitoring community care.

Bird Killing

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number of licences issued under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to permit the killing of (a) barnacle and (b) Greenland white-fronted geese on Islay in order to prevent serious agricultural damage for winter 1990-91 and the total number of geese of each species killed under licence on Islay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

	Barnacles	White-fronts
Number of licences issued	24	13
Number reported shot	1,365	62

Land Register

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to introduce a land register which reveals beneficial as well as nominal ownership of estates.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the ownership of land in Scotland is already available to the public by inspection of the General Register of Sasines or the Land Register of Scotland as appropriate, both of which are maintained by the Registers of Scotland Executive Agency. The Government have no plans to introduce a further register of land ownership in Scotland.

Careers Servics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure on the careers service by Scottish local authorities in each year since 1979, expressed both in actual sums spent and at 1990 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is the following:

Year	Actual Expenditure	Expenditure at 1990 prices £'000
1979-80	3,827	8,274
1980-81	4,719	8,622
1981-82	5,315	8,855
1982-83	5,602	8,717
1983-84	6,377	9,483
1984-85	6,939	9,819
1985-86	7,420	9,958
1986-87	7,758	10,062
1987-88	8,945	11,020
1988-89	9,696	11,112
1989-90	10,878	11,716
1990-91	13,873	13,873

Scottish Natural Heritage

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Nature Conservancy Council or Scottish Natural Heritage has budgeted money to fund the new natural heritage body.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Resources for Scottish Natural Heritage will be considered in this year's public expenditure round.

Caledon Forest

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what impact he estimates his policy for the future of Scotland's native Caledon forest will have on forest cover in 50 years' time;

(2) whether he will identify those areas of the Caledon forest which he hopes (a) to survive and (b) to expand in the next 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's policy for native pinewoods is to prevent any reduction in their area and to encourage their sensitive management and expansion through the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme. In addition, particularly important areas for nature conservation are designated as sites of special scientific interest. As a result of these policies, the area of native pinewoods in Scotland is expected to increase significantly over the next 10 and 50 years, although it is not possible to predict the future of any individual area.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the present levels of compensation to owners of the Caledon forest to ensure its survival, and its expansion.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: To encourage the maintenance, good management and expansion of native pinewoods the Forestry Commission offers the following establishment and management grants under its woodland grant scheme:

Establishment Grants (for planting, restocking and natural regeneration)		Management Grants
			Standard	Special
Area (hectares)	£ per hectare	Area (hectares)	£ per hectare	£ per hectare
Less than 1	1,575	Less than 10	35	45
1—2·9	1,375
3—9·9	1,175
10 and over	975	10 and over	25	35

SSSIs

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he received from voluntary conservation movements concerning the new clause to the Natural Heritage (Scotland) Bill relating to the advisory committee on sites of special scientific interest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has received letters from the following voluntary conservation organisations on the subject of the advisory committee on SSSIs: The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, the Worldwide Fund for Nature, the Scottish Wildlife Trust, Friends of the Earth (Scotland), and the Ramblers' Association. In addition, I had a meeting at their request with representatives of the RSPB on 12 June. My officials also met representatives of all the organisations listed on 18 June to discuss the new provision.

Regional Development Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to whom in Scotland, outside Government, details of companies in receipt of regional development assistance have been passed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Details of all companies receiving regional development grant or regional selective assistance where the total grant offered exceeds certain amounts are published quarterly in The Department of Employment

Gazette. Details of grants offered are subject to the normal constraints of commercial confidentiality and, apart from the published details, information on individual cases is not disclosed to third parties without companies' consent.

Fife Scottish Bus Company

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any of the bidders for the Fife Scottish Bus company are in receipt of Government grants or investment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None of the bidders for Fife Scottish Omnibuses Limited has received any direct Government funding for which my right hon. Friend is responsible. In January 1989 the Scottish Development Agency however made an investment on commercial terms of £500,000 in preference shares in Stagecoach (Holdings) Limited, alongside a number of other investors. These shares are now held by Scottish Enterprise.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any director of Scottish Enterpise has received remuneration from either of the current bidders for the Fife Scottish Bus company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The managing director of Stagecoach (Holdings) Ltd. one of the bidders for Fife Scottish, was a board member of Scottish Enterprise from 5 March 1990 until her resignation through pressure of business on 29 October 1990. The affairs of Fife Scottish Bus company, or of the current bidders, have not been discussed by the Scottish Enterprise board. Consequently there has been no occasion for board members to declare any personal interest in the bidders, and the private financial affairs of board members are not a matter for my right hon. Friend. So far as I am aware, however, no other Scottish Enterprise board member nor any senior employee has, since appointment, received remuneration from any bidder.

Government Assistance to Companies

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to whom in Scotland, outside Government, any details of individuals, companies or providers in receipt of either employment training, youth training, business growth training or enterprise allowance scheme have been passed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am not in a position to say, for every case in Scotland, to whom outside Government details have been passed of individuals, companies or providers involved with employment training, youth training, business growth training or the enterprise allowance scheme.

In normal circumstances details relating to current trainees will be held by training managers and training agents and will be made available to local enterprise officials and officials of Scottish Enterprise or Highlands and Islands Enterprise as necessary for operational purposes. Details of individual trainees may also be given to placement providers and to the careers service where it is appropriate to do so for the purposes of securing suitable training.

Details of companies and training providers will normally be held by local enterprise companies and in some cases their agents but Scottish Enterprise or Highlands and Islands Enterprise officials may have access to that information for operational purposes.

Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and local enterprise companies will not normally divulge any information they hold to a third party unless they are satisfied that the trainee, company or provider has acquiesced to the provision of that information or where the person or body seeking the information has authority to demand it—for example, the police.

AIDS

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the expenditure on HIV/AIDS treatment care and prevention by each of the Scottish health boards in 1990-91 in (a) cash and (b) 1991-92 prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 8 July 1991]: This information is not yet available centrally, but will be included in reports being prepared by health boards under the AIDS (Control) Act 1987.

Housing

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the number of properties to be inspected in each local authority area for the national house condition survey is to be determined.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The number of dwellings which will be surveyed in each local authority area will depend on the outcome of a random sample selection. At least 15,000 dwellings in Scotland will be surveyed, and to achieve this a large number will initially be selected.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will allocate resources to Sutherland district council and Caithness district council to enable those authorities to undertake a housing conditions survey which complies with the Scottish Office model.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1991]: Sutherland and Caithness district councils should include any plans for carrying out local house condition surveys in their housing capital programmes which are due to be submitted to the Scottish Office environment department in November. Any such plans will be taken into account in determining the level of housing capital allocations for these authorities in 1992-93.

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what manner the findings of the Scottish Office building inspectorate study of weather conditions and their effect on houses are reflected in the capital allocations made to Sutherland district council.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1991]: It is for local authorities to take account of all relevant factors when assessing their housing needs and reflecting these in the housing capital programmes which the Scottish Office environment department asks to be submitted in November each year. Housing capital programmes are taken into account when decisions are made on capital allocations.

Careers Service

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many responses were received to the recently published consultation document "The Future of the Careers Service"; and if he will place copies of these responses in the Library;

(2) how many responses which he received on the consultation paper "The Future of the Careers Service" favoured (a) local enterprise companies acquiring full responsibility for providing the service, (b) education/business partnerships becoming responsible, (c) the service being contracted out through competitive tender and (d) the service continuing to be run by the education authorities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Sixty-one responses were received up to 5 July. Of these seven supported the provision of the careers service through local enterprise companies; 23 favoured some form of partnership; two saw merit in contracting out and 29 suggested a continuation of the current arrangements. Some further responses are expected.

Copies of all responses received are being placed in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Environmental Training Initiatives

12. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to support future environmental training initiatives in the Sheffield area following the withdrawal of training and enterprise council funding of environmental training projects.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. and learned Friend announced extra resources for training on 19 June. It is for Sheffield TEC to decide, within its contract with my Department, what training, including environmental training, to support in the Sheffield area.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

13. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people have founded their own business since 1983 under the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Forth: Between August 1983 and May 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, the enterprise allowance scheme has helped 571,953 people to start their own business.

National Vocational Qualifications

14. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about his proposals to extend national vocational qualifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The proposals relating to national vocational qualifications in the Government's White Paper "Education and Training for the 21st Century" have been widely welcomed. The National Council for Vocational Qualifications is on target to produce by the end of 1992 NVQs covering 80 per cent. of the work force up to level 4 of its framework. The council has also been asked to lead on developing more general national vocational qualifications.

Low Pay

15. Mrs Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of employed persons paid less than £3·40 per hour.

Mr. Howard: We estimate that the number paid less than this is around 4 million, of whom 1 million are teenagers.

Unemployment

16. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage change in the level of unemployment in the last 12 months in (i) Leyton and (ii) London.

Mr. Jackson: In the parliamentary constituency of Leyton and in the Greater London region, unemployment, not seasonally adjusted, increased by 60 per cent. in the 12 months to May 1991.

Small Firms Service

17. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the work of the small firms service.

Mr. Forth: The small firms service has an excellent reputation in providing high quality information, advice and business counselling to new and existing small businesses. It dealt with over 317,000 inquiries and gave more than 50,000 counselling sessions in its last full year of operation. The service is now being transferred to the emerging network of training and enterprise councils who have plans to make further significant improvements to make it even more effective in meeting local needs.

Nuclear Inspectors

18. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to increase the complement of qualified nuclear inspectors.

Mr. Forth: On 1 June 1991, there were 163 nuclear inspectors in post in the Health and Safety Executive. HSE plans to increase this to 176 by 1 April 1992.

Training, Stockport and Tameside

19. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on training in Stockport and Tameside.

Mr. Jackson: A wide range of services and programmes are provided by the two local training and enterprise councils which benefit businesses and individuals in Stockport and Tameside.

European Social Charter

20. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the EC Social Affairs Commissioner to discuss the social charter.

Mr. Howard: I met Mrs. Papandreou at the Social Affairs Council on 25 June.

Minimum Wage

21. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union regarding proposals for a national statutory minimum wage.

Mr. Howard: I have not received any representations from the EETPU, but the union's general secretary has made it clear that his members would strongly oppose any wage restraint for higher paid workers linked to Labour's proposals for the introduction of a national legal minimum wage. If differentials were fully restored up to 2 million jobs could be lost.

28. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received seeking the introduction of a statutory minimum wage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Most of the representations I receive are strongly opposed to any statutory wage fixing. The Labour party's proposal for a national legal minimum wage has been condemned by employers, academics and trades unions.

Training and Enterprise Councils

23. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he will take to help the TECs provide a higher level of training for the south-west.

Mr. Jackson: Training and enterprise councils have been given the resources to undertake training which is relevant to the needs of their local areas.

Labour Statistics

24. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people in work in (a) 1979 and (b) the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Howard: The work force in employment in the United Kingdom stood at 25,365,000 in June 1979 and at 26,666,000 in December 1990—an increase of 1·3 million over the period.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were registered unemployed in Tower Hamlets in each year since 1970, by electoral ward.

Mr. Jackson: Information, relating to claimants at unemployment benefit offices, is available from June 1983 and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library.

Trade Unions (Complaints)

25. Mr. David E[illegible]s: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many complaints the trade union certification officer has received from trade union members in each of the last two years.

Mr. Forth: The certification officer is an independent authority appointed under statute. I understand that he received five formal complaints under specific statutory provisions from trade union members during 1989, and 12 such complaints during 1990. Details are given in the certification officer's annual reports to the Secretary of State, copies of which are available in the Library.

Rugby and Daventry Travel to Work Area

27. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many are now employed in the Rugby/Daventry travel to work area; and what the number was when the Rugby/Daventry travel to work area was first established.

Mr. Jackson: The most recent estimates of employment in travel-to-work areas are taken from the September 1989 census of employment. There were then an estimated 49,400 employees in employment in the Rugby and Daventry travel-to-work area. This compares with a figure of 44,100 in September 1981, the earliest date for which figures are available.

EC Social Affairs Directives

26. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many social affairs directives of the EC have been implemented by (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany and (d) Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: A European Commission report in November 1990 showed that the United Kingdom had implemented all 18 measures agreed in the social area, France and Germany had implemented 17, and Italy 11. These figures support our view that the Community needs to pay as much attention to implementation and enforcement of agreed measures as it does to new proposals.

Salary Increases

22. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect of high salary increases on employment.

Mr. Howard: There is no doubt that high pay increases cost jobs. It is estimated that a 1 per cent. increase in the average real wage lowers employment by about 110,000 to 220,000.

Disabled People

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what appeal mechanism exists for disabled persons who are refused employment because of their disability.

Mr. Jackson: Where people feel that they have been refused employment because of their disability they can take up the matter with the disablement advisory service or a disablement resettlement officer who, where appropriate, can contact the employer and seek to overcome any prejudice or misunderstanding including providing guidance on the wide range of help available for integrating people with disabilities into the work force.

Training Schemes, Avon

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the amounts of allocations agreed from the European social fund for employment and training schemes in the Avon training area for the years commencing 1 April 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Forth: Allocations for the European social fund are determined on a calendar year basis. The amounts per calendar year for individual schemes supported outside the Government sector in Avon are as follows:

Year	Amount £
1989	478,387
1990	490,697
1991	648,782

Allocations for 1991 have not yet been finalised and are therefore provisional. In addition to these specific allocations, the Avon area benefits from the European social fund through support for national programmes such as employment training and youth training.

Government Measures

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment is made of the impact on employment of new Government measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The new measures that my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 19 June will promote employment by helping unemployed people back to work, preparing them for the jobs that are available and keeping them in touch with the labour market. They will raise the total number of opportunities which the Government are making available to unemployed people from 650,000 to 840,000 this year and to 900,000 next year—more than ever before.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 10 July 1991

TRANSPORT

Transport Security

Mr. Ames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the 1990-91 annual report of the Chief Inspector of Transport Security.

Mr. Rifkind: I am today placing copies of this report in the Library of the House.

Shipping Accidents

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what systematic assessment is made of human error in casualty investigations for shipping accidents.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 9 July 1991]: Inspectors carrying out investigations into marine accidents are fully alive to the human factor in all its forms. Their inquiries, therefore, as a matter of course, include examination into the possibility of error and, where it is found, an assessment both of its cause and its effect.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer of 2 July, how many accidents listed have been attributed to human error for each year 1981 to 1990 involving United Kingdom registered vessels, and 1989 to 1990 involving United Kingdom ferries.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 9 July 1991]: The majority of accidents have several contributory factors and cannot be attributed to one specific individual cause. A list such as that asked for therefore cannot be provided. However, human error is considered to be at least one factor in some 80 per cent. of accidents; this applies to vessels of all types including ferries.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to lay before Parliament and to publish the annual report of the Serious Fraud Office for the year 1990-91.

The Attorney-General: The report has today been laid before Parliament. I have caused a copy of the report to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Treaties

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those treaties that have been signed by Her Majesty's Government but have not yet been ratified, giving for each treaty the date of signing.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the process by which treaties are ratified by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Before ratifying a treaty Her Majesty's Government must ensure that they have the necessary statutory powers to enable them to give effect to its provisions and, if not, that the necessary enabling legislation is made. The text of the treaty is then laid before Parliament for a minimum of 21 parliamentary sitting days before it is ratified in order to give Parliament the opportunity to debate its provisions.

CFE Treaty

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects Her Majesty's Government to ratify the conventional forces in Europe treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We expect to do so this autumn.

Antarctica

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether his Department has evaluated what effect withdrawing a regular Royal Navy presence in Antarctica could have on the United Kingdom's current and future association with that area;

(2) what assessment has been made of the impact of the withdrawal of HMS Endurance on the study and understanding of the Antarctic continent and protection of United Kingdom interests in that region.

Mr. Garel-Jones: HMS Endurance carries out hydrographic surveys and provides support for the British Antarctic Survey's science programme. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence is aware of the role of HMS Endurance in supporting Her Majesty's Government's commitment to British interests in the area.

Romania

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were last made to the Romanian authorities about anti-semitism.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We take every suitable opportunity to press the Romanian Government to ensure that the rights of all members of the Jewish and other minority communities in Romania are fully respected. We have asked Her Majesty's ambassador in Bucharest to monitor closely certain recent expressions of anti-semitism in Romania.

Mr. Peter Nadin

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with reference to his correspondence with the hon. Member for Islington, North, if he will ask the British embassy in Athens to investigate the circumstances surrounding the death of the hon. Member's constituent Peter Nadin while in police custody; and if he will meet the hon. Member for Islington, North to receive representations on behalf of the deceased's mother.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British consular officers have no investigatory rôle. Mr. Nadin's death was investigated by the Greek authorities in 1984. They concluded that he committed suicide. The Greek authorities reviewed the case in 1985 at our request. They reached the same conclusion. In the absence of new evidence we have no grounds to ask them to reopen the case.

In the circumstances, there is little to be gained from a meeting about this sad case.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

INWARD

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what proportion of moneys allocated to INWARD for industrial promotion in the north-west of England is allocated for the promotion of Cumbria;

(2) if he will state on what county justification basis moneys are allocated to INWARD for the industrial promotion of the north-west of England.

Mr. Leigh: For the current financial year, 1991-92, INWARD received from the Department of Trade and Industry grant-in-aid of £900,000. This grant is allocated to INWARD on the basis of an agreed business plan for the promotion of overseas inward investment into the north-west. However, within the broad thrust of promotion of the region it is for INWARD to decide the most appropriate allocations of emphasis, including that to individual counties such as Cumbria, to meet its business objectives.

The principal objective is to provide information on all parts of the region in response to investors inquiries. Many of these are relayed to INWARD from the Invest In Britain Bureau as a result of the latter's promotional activities on behalf of the UK. Another objective is to service such investors, on behalf of IBB, when visiting the region. These activities are funded 100 per cent. The DTI through IBB, also funds 50 per cent. of INWARD's own promotional activity overseas, and it is free to attract additional funding from local sources to supplement this activity or for other regional activities in which the Department has no direct involvement.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will monitor the use of moneys paid to INWARD for industrial promotion in the north-west to ensure that each county that is a member of INWARD receives its fair share of industrial inquiries.

Mr. Leigh: The Department of Trade and Industry closely monitors the activities of all the regional development organisations, including INWARD, to ensure that the grant is spent to the best effect. An important function of an RDO is to provide a "one-stop shop" where all the potential sites in the region can be accessed by an investor. In responding to inquiries from industry the prime concern of RDOs must be to supply what industry needs, which will include fulfilling locational requirements as closely as possible. Although I have no doubts that all RDOs make every effort to ensure that all local authority members have a chance to respond to suitable inquiries, relations with members are principally a matter for the respective RDO board.

Sound Diffusion Ltd.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department has taken following his inspectors' reports on Sound Diffusion Ltd.

Mr. Redwood: Following the receipt of the inspectors' report, consideration is being given to the possibility of application to the court under section 8 of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986. A copy of the report has also been provided to the Institute of Chartered Accountants for it to consider the conduct of its members.

Investment Brokers Act 1977

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to review the scope and contents of the Investment Brokers Act 1977.

Mr. Redwood: I assume that the hon. Member is asking about the Insurance Brokers Registration Act 1977. I have no plans to review it.

Ernst and Young

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on how many occasions since 1988 his Department's inspectors have criticised the performance of Ernst and Young and its predecessors.

Mr. Redwood: Three reports of Companies Act inspectors published since 1 January 1989 contain criticisms of the firms which now form Ernst and Young:

Name of company	Date of publication of report	Name of firm criticised
Alexander Howden Holdings plc	29 August 1990	Arthur Young
Minet Holdings plc/ WMD Underwriting Agencies Limited	29 August 1990	Arthur Young
Sound Diffusion plc	1 May 1991	Arthur Young Ernst and Whinney

Insurance Selling

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regulations exist to ensure capital adequacy, creditworthiness and sound financial reporting by sellers of insurance not covered by the Investment Brokers Act 1977.

Mr. Redwood: As regards insurance intermediaries not registered under the Insurance Brokers Registration Act, those selling insurance which comprises an investment product are regulated under the Financial Services Act regime, and those selling general insurance come under the Association of British Insurers' code of practice for non-registered general insurance intermediaries.

Space Consultative Committee

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the consultative committee with companies active in space last met; and when it will next meet.

Mr. Leigh: The space consultative committee was wound up in 1987 following the formation of the British national space centre and the introduction of new consultative arrangements with the space industry. The British national space centre regularly consults companies active in space through its advisory committees and other consultative procedures.

Medicines

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) of 1 July, Official Report, column 19, how many generic manufacturers made representations; and how many of these actually manufacture in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 9 July 1991]: The represenations received from the manufacturers of generic medicines have come through their representative bodies, the European generics forum and the standard formulary medicines register of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry. I do not have details of the source of the products of the companies they represent, either as active ingredients or in the finished version.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of (a) central Government expenditure, (b) local government expenditure and (c) national health service expenditure for each of the years 1961, 1970, 1980, 1990 and at the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will show each figure as a percentage of gross domestic product.

Mr. Mellor: The information required is as follows:

	Central Government (a)		Local Authorities (b)		Health (c)
Year	£ million	Percentage of GDP	£ million	Percentage of GDP	£ million	Percentage of GDP
1960	6,678	26·3	2,266	8·9	861	3·4
1970	14,396	28·3	6,522	12·8	1,979	3·9
1980	75,877	33·3	28,323	12·4	11,633	5·1
1990	156,286	28·9	56,416	10·4	[1]n.a.	[2]n.a.

[1] 1989 = £25,332 million.
[2] 1989 = 5·1 per cent. of GDP.

Central Government expenditure includes health expenditure given under (c). Money GDP figures, used as the denominator for the calculation of the percentages, have been adjusted for the distortion arising from abolition of domestic rates.

Advisory Committee on Advertising

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the membership and, where appropriate, the employment, of the Advisory Committee on Advertising in 1980 and the changes since then.

Mr. Maples: Members of ACA in 1980 were:

Mr. G. C. Draper	Director, Commercial Operations, British Airways
Mr. K. Jacobs	Marketing Manager, Birds Eye Ltd
Mr. W. B. Morrell	Ex Vice-Chairman, Westminster Press Ltd
Mr. B. Nicholson[1]	Head of Public Affairs, Lloyd's of London
Mr. H. Thomas	Chairman, Thames Television International Ltd
Mr. B. H. Silverman	Marketing Manager, Food Division Co-operative Wholesale Society
Mr. J. S. McClean	Managing Director, Women's Magazines Group IPC Magazines Ltd

Members who have served since 1980 are:

Mr. R. Halstead (1981)	Chairman, Beecham Products
Mr. B. Downing (1983)	Deputy Chief Executive IPC Magazines Ltd
Mr. P. Gittoes (1983)	Head of Advertising Services, Barclays Bank plc
Mr. D. Hughes (1984)	Head of Public Relations, Thorn EMI plc
Mr. M. Samuel (1984)[1]	Environment Affairs Manager, J. Sainsbury plc
Mr. J. Mellon (1984)[1]	Chief Executive, IPC Magazines Ltd
Mrs. A. Ferguson (1986)[1]	Head of Group Communications, ICI plc
Mr. C. Auld (1987)[1]	Group Managing Director, Intercraft Designs Ltd
Mr. H. Turner (1987)	Managing Director, Television South West
Mr. E. Walsh (1990)	Marketing Director, Birds Eye Wall's Ltd
Mr. N. Phillips (1990)[1]	Director General, Institute of the Practitioners of Advertising
Mr. R. Spelman (1990)[1]	General Manager, Marketing, Halifax Building Society
Mr. E. Nicoli (1991)[1]	Chief Executive—European Operations, United Biscuits (Holdings) plc

[1] Current Committee members

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, for each agency nominated for the first time since 1985 by the Advisory Committee on Advertising, whether it applied or whether it was appointed to be considered.

Mr. Maples: No records are kept of when advertising agencies, nominated by the Advisory Committee on Advertising to take part in competitions for Government work, were nominated for the first time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the agencies nominated in each year from 1985 by the Advisory Committee on Advertising.

Mr. Maples: The advertising agencies nominated by the Advisory Committee on Advertising to compete for Government campaigns from 1985 are listed in the table.

Unemployment Costs

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he makes of the average weekly cost to the Exchequer for each unemployed person taking into account benefit paid, staff costs for administering the benefit agency, costs of job clubs, jobcentres, restart schemes and associated costs.

Mr. Mellor: The cost to the Exchequer for each unemployed person will depend on the person's family and other circumstances, contribution record, any tax liability, and the administrative costs of assessing and paying benefit and helping find new employment. An estimate of the benefit element of this is given in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1991-92 to 1993-94: Social Security" (Cm 1514), page 11, table 8.

Advertising Agencies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eltham of 2 July, Official Report, columns 87-88, what list the Advisory Committee on Advertising maintains of agencies considered suitable for nomination to work for government.

Mr. Maples: The Advisory Committee on Advertising has wide knowledge and experience of many advertising agencies but does not maintain a standing list of agencies considered suitable to compete for Government work.

Consideration of suitability for nomination is made to meet the circumstances of each separate competition.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria are used by the Advisory Committee on Advertising to decide whether an agency may be nominated for Government business.

Mr. Maples: Advertising agencies are nominated to compete for Government business by the Advisory Committee on Advertising when the Committee considers that the agency's competence, experience and performance match the requirements of a particular competition.

Pension Funds

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total revenue foregone to the Exchequer over a financial year of (a) individual contributions to pension funds being tax free for (i) standard rate payers and (ii) higher rate payers, (b) the income and capital gains of pension funds being tax exempt and (c) the facility open to an individual of taking up to a quarter of their accrued pension rights as a lump sum payment free from tax.

Mr. Maude: The latest available estimates for 1990-91 are as follows.

Relief for	£ million
Employee contributions to occupational pension schemes[1 2]	2,200
Investment income of occupational pension schemes[1 3]	4,900
Lump sum payments to pensioners[1]	1,000
Contributions to personal pensions (including retirement annuity premia and FSAVCs)[4 5]	1,100

[1] The total cost of tax reliefs for occupational pension schemes cannot be calculated by adding together the cost of individual reliefs as this would imply a considerable degree of multiple taxation.

[2] It is not possible to provide a reliable breakdown of the total cost of relief between basic rate and higher rate taxpayers.

[3] Assuming relief at the basic rate of income tax.

[4] Including income tax relief on employers' contributions to personal pensions on the basis that under present arrangements employers' contributions are not taxable as a benefit in kind of the employee.

[5] It is not possible to provide reliable estimates of the cost of exemption for investment income and lump sum payments related to retirement annuity contracts and personal pensions.

London Allowance

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the rate of London allowance for civil servants in support and executive grades respectively since 1987; if he will make it his policy to submit requests for adjustment to arbitration; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is as follows.

London weighting allowance

	1 April 1987 £	1 July 1988 £
Inner	1,527	1,750
Intermediate	876	1,000
Outer	641	725

London weighting for civil servants has not been increased since 1988. However, since 1988 London pay points worth between 4 per cent. and 7 per cent., depending on grade, have been introduced for most civil servants in London, along with local pay additions worth up to £1,000 a year targeted at locations with severe recruitment and retention problems.

Over the past two years, over £87 million a year has been spent enhancing London pay in this way, in addition to national pay increases. This represents an increase of over 50 per cent. in the London element of the pay bill. Unlike London weighting, London spine points and local pay additions are targeted to ensure that public money is used most cost-effectively. Over the past two years, recruitment and retention rates in London have improved very significantly.

The Government's policy is that pay should be based on what is required to recruit, retain and motivate within what is affordable. The Government's intention is to continue to set London pay in accordance with that policy and, where appropriate, to target increases in the London element of pay to ensure that they produce the best value for money for the taxpayer.

Successive Governments have reserved the right not to go to arbitration on issues which raise policy considerations. In previous years London weighting claims have raised policy issues in respect of public expenditure control and the targeting of pay increases to secure best value for money on which arbitration would not have been appropriate.

Scotch Whisky

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what formal proposals have been made by him to European colleagues to protect the export of Scotch whisky to the Community; what further discussions he intends to hold with EC colleagues on the implications of an EC indirect tax scheme for Scotch whisky exports to the rest of the EC; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: At the ECOFIN Council on 24 June, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer successfully argued against the proposal to set a minimum level of spirits duty post-1992 which would have unacceptably increased discrimination against Scotch whisky in the southern member states. As a result, no minimum rate was agreed and at my right hon. Friend's request the Commission will be examining possible distortions in the alcoholic drinks market and reporting later this year. Further discussions on the minimum rate will take place on the basis of that report.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total annual value accruing to the Treasury of (a) domestic and (b) international sales of Scotch whisky.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information available relates to the VAT and excise duty yield from domestic sales of whisky which in 1990 is estimated to have been £1 billion. International sales do not produce excise or VAT revenue.

Single European Currency

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out his current assessment of the effect of a single currency on the annual gross domestic product of the European Community.

Mr. Maude: It is too early to predict what the effect of a single currency would be on Community GDP. Potential benefits might accrue from reductions in transactions costs and exchange rate risk, and lower inflation. But compared to existing ERM arrangements, a single currency does not of itself guarantee lower inflation or reduced exchange rate risk against non-Community currencies, and the transactions cost advantages are unlikely to be large. Moreover, the success of any move to a single currency would depend on Community economies first having achieved sufficient sustainable convergence in terms of inflation rates, interest rates, budget deficits and market flexibility. Otherwise there would be adverse effects on Community GDP and unemployment.

Sterling M3

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 567, if he will provide the information requested for sterling M3 for the relevant periods prior to cessation of the publication.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is shown in the following table:

12-month growth rates of sterling M3

ECOFIN

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels on 8 July. The Minister for Corporate Affairs and I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council held a discussion of economic convergence within the Community as part of the regular multilateral surveillance of the economies of member states. The Council agreed that greater progress towards economic convergence was desirable and that, where necessary, member states would submit medium-term economic programmes to promote convergence. The Council's conclusions have today been placed in the Library in accordance with article 8 of the 1990 convergence decision.

The revised annual economic report was adopted, a copy of which is also in the Library.

Over lunch there was a brief procedural discussion of EMU in which it was agreed that the next ministerial meeting of the IGC would be held on 9 September.

The investment services directive was again discussed, but without further agreement. The Minister for Corporate Affairs continued to argue for a liberal and market-sensitive directive.

Lending outside the Community by the European investment bank was also discussed. The Council agreed to return to the technical and financial aspects of this question in the autumn on the basis of a report by the Commission and the EIB. It was agreed that in the meantime the bank could consider extending loans to countries with which the Community had a co-operation agreement on a case-by-case basis in accordance with its existing statute.

The agreement by the European Council to offer a balance of payments loan to Algeria was discussed, but no agreement was reached as to the amount or details of such a loan.

It was agreed that a loan guaranteed by the Community of up to 375 million ecu should also be offered to Romania provided that each tranche was matched by equal contributions from members of the G24 outside the Community and other countries.

The Council also adopted a declaration on the Commission's report on countering fraud against the Community budget in 1990, setting out additional objectives for the year ahead; and the United Kingdom made a brief statement stressing the importance of this issue and the need to monitor results, and welcoming the agreement to review the scope of the Commission's 45-point action plan in the light of experience.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

ODA Budget

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent from the Overseas Development Administration budget for each of the past 10 years, in terms of 1991 prices, on construction and infrastructural projects in developing nations, where a United Kingdom company was the only or main contractor.

Mrs. Chalker: ODA projects are classified by recipient country sector for records purposes. Details of construction and infrastructure projects where a United Kingdom contractor was involved could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Aid

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid is given by the United Kingdom to (a) Benin, (b) Burundi, (c) Comoros, (d) Equatorial Guinea, (e) Ghana, (f) Guinea, (g) Kenya, (h) Liberia, (i) Madagasgar, (j) Malawi, (k) Mali, (l) Mauritania, (m) Mozambique, (n) Myanmar, (o) Niger, (p) Sao Tome and Principe, (q) Sierra Leone, (r) Somalia, (s) Sudan, (t) Tanzania, (u) Togo, (v) Zaire, (w) Zambia, (x) Guinea-Bissau, (y) Guyana and (z) Nigeria.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom's gross bilateral aid during 1989, the most recent year for which figures are currently available, was as follows:

Country	£ 000s
Benin	331
Burundi	152
Comoros	7
Equatorial Guinea	84
Ghana	50,206
Guinea	456
Kenya	53,941
Liberia	613
Madagascar	316
Malawi	43,114
Mali	1,156
Mauritania	152
Mozambique	22,431
Burma	699
Niger	281
Sao Tome and Principe	—
Sierra Leone	2,808
Somalia	5,295
Sudan	31,436
Tanzania	38,056
Togo	278
Zaire	728
Zambia	19,711
Guinea-Bissau	41
Guyana	6,561
Nigeria	62,963

Development aid programmes to Sudan and Somalia were suspended in 1991. Aid to Burma was suspended in 1988 and the amount shown for 1989 covered residual payments and ongoing costs of trainees already in Britain.

Natural Resources Institute

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of the Natural Resources Institute, including performance-related element, and the length of time of the chief executive's contract.

Mrs. Chalker: The chief executive of the Natural Resources Institute is paid as a grade 3 in the civil service. Currently the London rate is £51,300 with a salary range up to a maximum of £59,000 including performance-related pay. The present chief executive was appointed for two years in the first instance ending 31 March 1992.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state the first degree obtained by the chief executive of the Natural Resources Institute and from which university or polytechnic it was awarded.

Mrs. Chalker: The present chief executive of the Natural Resources Institute has a first degree in economics from Cambridge university.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of the Natural Resources Institute as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by the parent department or the new agency;

(2) how many staff were in post on the date that the Natural Resources Institute was established as an executive agency; and how many staff are in post now;

(3) if he will list the new forms of alternative working patterns introduced into the Natural Resources Institute since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will give a breakdown by grade of the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(4) what appointments from the private sector have been made to the Natural Resources Institute at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable, including performance-related element;

(5) if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by the Natural Resources Institute since its establishment as an executive agency identifying separately those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status;

(6) if he will list those new facilities for staff including nurseries and healthcare schemes, which have been introduced in the Natural Resources Institute since its establishment as an executive agency;

(7) what group bonus schemes are in operation in the Natural Resources Institute; and if he will state the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award;

(8) when the last annual report for the Natural Resources Institute was published; and when the next one is due.

Mrs. Chalker: I have asked the chief executive of the Natural Resources Institute to write to the hon. Member.

Kurds

Mr, Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his written answers to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East on 25 April, Official Report, columns 507-8, 2 May, Official Report, column 288, and 15 May, Official Report, column 192-94, if he will update the information supplied concerning aid to the Kurds.

Mrs. Chalker: (a) As of 10 July, the Overseas Development Administration has provided a further 293 tonnes of relief supplies as described in the table:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wild Birds

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the regulations and controls that over the export or re-export of wild birds; and, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) of 26 June, Official Report, column 498, how many of the imported wild birds are subsequently re-exported.

Mr. Maclean: The Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973, as amended, lays down a number of general measures designed to safeguard the welfare of a wide variety of animals, including captive birds, during their transportation to, from or within Great Britain.

Animal health conditions for the export or re-export of captive birds are laid down by the veterinary authorities of the countries of destination and it would be impracticable to publish in the Official Report the numerous export health certificates which exist.

Controls under CITES and the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

The Ministry has no information on the number of imported captive birds which are subsequently re-exported.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many white-fronted Amazon parrots were imported into the United Kingdom in 1988; and what proportion died either in transit or while in quarantine;

(2) how many crimson seed-cracker species of wild bird were imported into the United Kingdom in 1988; and what proportion suffered mortality either in transit or while in quarantine.

Mr. Maclean: Information on mortality in birds imported into Great Britain is given in the Ministry's publications "Importation of Birds—Mortality Statistics from Quarantine Returns", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

In 1988, 489 white-fronted Amazons (Amazona albifrons) were imported, of which 376 were dead on arrival or died in quarantine. The figures for crimson seedcracker (Pyrenestes sanquineus) were 20 and 19 respectively.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the veterinary investigations service concerning the importation and quarantine of wild-caught birds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The veterinary investigations service is not directly involved in advising on the health conditions under which captive birds are imported and quarantined. Its role in this respect is to report to the state veterinary service the outcome of tests on the carcases of birds submitted for post-mortem examination as required by the terms of import licences.

Scotch Whisky

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total volume and value of exports of Scotch whisky to (a) Europe, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan at the most recent available date.

Mr. Curry: In 1990, exports of whisky to the destinations specified were as follows:

	£ million	Million litres of pure alcohol
European Community	631	89
United States of America	276	47
Japan	178	21

Note: Includes small quantities of Northern Irish whiskey, Bourbon and immature plain cereal spirits.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total volume and value of exports of Scotch whisky in each of the past five years.

Mr. Curry: In the past five years, exports of Scotch whisky were as follows:

	£ million	Million litres of pure alcohol
1986	1,070	236
1987	1,136	240
1988	1,289	246
1989	1,470	242
1990	1,712	238

Note: The figures include small quantities of Northern Irish whiskey.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of total agricultural land in environmentally sensitive areas is subject to ESA agreements; and what percentage of ESA target areas is covered by such agreements.

Mr. Curry: In the 10 ESAs in England there are 115,960 hectares covered by agreements. This represents 45 per cent. of the potentially eligible agricultural land. The schemes do not target particular areas of eligible land, but as an indicator of the success of uptake, targets were set of 75 per cent. of eligible grassland and 10 per cent. of eligible arable land. The area covered by agreements represents 92 per cent. of these targets.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 75, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign.

Mr. Curry: MAFF's touring exhibition, currently taking consumer information to major shopping centres and agricultural shows, commenced its programme on 20 May 1991 and is scheduled to finish on 5 October 1991. The revision of the Department's range of publications on food is still in hand.

SCOTLAND

NHS Staff

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the percentage change in the number of administrative and clerical staff in the national health service in Scotland between September 1979 and the latest available date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The percentage of all personnel in the national health service in Scotland who were classified as administrative and clerical for statistical purposes was 10·9 per cent. in September 1979 and 12·9 per cent. in September 1990: the corresponding percentages for medical and nursing personnel were 53·8 per cent. and 59·6 per cent. respectively. The figures for administrative and clerical staff include staff engaged in clinically related work and the 1990 figures also include general and senior management grades which contain a number of professional and technical staff.

Careers Service

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent through the careers service strengthening scheme in Scotland in each year since 1979, expressed both in current prices and in actual sums spent.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

£000

Year	Actual expenditure	Expenditure at 1990 prices
1979-80	544	1,176
1980-81	723	1,321
1981-82	937	1,561
1982-83	1,329	2,067
1983-84	1,645	2,446

Hospital Waste

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 14 June, Official Report, column 713, what studies have been undertaken into the possibility that waste from NHS hospitals in Scotland could enter into water supplies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am not aware of any specific studies into this subject area. However, all public water supplies are monitored by the water authorities and no reports have been received of any problems of this sort.

Fisheries (Restrictions)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will introduce changes in the administration of the eight-day tie-up regulations to prevent discrimination against smaller ports with limited repair facilities;

(2) what changes he has considered in the implementation of the eight-day tie-up regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This Government must administer the eight-day tie-up scheme in line with the terms of EC regulation No. 3926/90. However, we are always prepared to consider specific administrative changes in the application of the eight-day scheme provided that they do not conflict with that responsibility. Each case brought to our attention is considered individually and arrangements are made where possible.

Local Authority Usable Receipts

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate for local authority usable receipts in 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 1 July 1991]: In Scotland, all local authority receipts are usable in the year in which they are generated. My right hon. Friend's estimate of local authority housing receipts in 1991-92 is £248 million. He has, as yet, made no estimate of housing receipts for 1992-93. He has made no estimate of non-housing receipts for either year.

British Steel

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he received on 4 June concerning the plate mill review in British Steel; what subsequent representations were made by the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will detail the meetings he, his junior Ministers or his officials have had with the chairman or officials of British Steel from the beginning of June 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1991]: My right hon. Friend and I last met the chairman of British Steel on 4 June, when we were told in strict confidence of the company's decision to invest in new plate facilities at Teesside.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what statements he has made to the British Steel chairman about his policy on the plate mill closure;

(2) what public statements he has made on the future of plate-making facilities at Dalzell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 5 July 1991]: It would not be appropriate to disclose details of my right hon. Friend's discussions with the chairman of British Steel which are bound by commercial confidentiality. But we have consistently pressed British Steel over a long period, publicly and in private, to give full consideration to the case for investment at Dalzell.

NORTHERN IRELAND

International Investments Ltd.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what representations have been made to the Government of the Irish Republic and the United States Government regarding the collapse of International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar, (in liquidation);

(2) what action has been taken to date by the Royal Ulster Constabulary regarding the collapse of International Investments Ltd., Gibraltar, (in liquidation);

(3) whether he will seek assurance from the Government of the Irish Republic that the persons responsible for misappropriation of moneys invested by United Kingdom citizens in International Investments Ltd. will be made amenable to prosecution.

Dr. Mawhinney: International Investments Ltd. was a company registered in Gibraltar and not in the United Kingdom. The liquidation is therefore a matter for the authorities in Gibraltar and the responsibility for making representations to other Governments regarding International Investments Ltd. does not lie with Her Majesty's Government.

Further to the RUC investigation into allegations of fraud by the principals of International Investments Ltd., the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland has directed that one person be charged with conspiracy to fraud. The investigations are still continuing.

Stormont Talks (Expenditure)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the remuneration and expenses agreed for the chairman of the second strand of the talks at Stormont, Sir Ninian Stephen; and what proportion will be contributed by (a) the Government of the Republic of Ireland and (b) Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the statement that I made in the House on 3 July 1991 at columns 319-20.

As the talks which were held on the basis of my statement of 26 March 1991 have now concluded without the second strand having commenced, these questions do not arise.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospitals have been closed in each year since 1974.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 5 July 1991]: The information is:

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

18. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to publish any regulations on local government finance prior to the summer adjournment.

Mr. Key: Subject to final decisions, my Department expects to lay three statutory instruments covering amendments to the non-domestic rating transitional arrangements and the payment of interest to ratepayers, and minor amendments and consequential repeals under the Local Government Finance Act 1988.

35. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the outline financial settlement for local authorities for 1992-93.

Mr. Key: When he is ready to do so.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which areas of central Government support to local authorities are calculated on the basis of (a) the electoral roll and (b) OPCS calculations.

Mr. Key: The electoral roll is not used directly in the provision of central Government support to local authorities. However, the annual mid-year estimates of the resident population produced by OPCS are based partly on changes in the electoral roll from year to year. These estimates, along with census data and other indicators, are used to calculate the standard spending assessments and hence the level of revenue support grant appropriate to each local authority.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish population figures for each standard region in England for the years 1981-82 to 1991-92, on the same basis as was used to calculate per capita standard spending assessments in his written answer of 29 April, Official Report, column 10.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is shown in the table. There is a lag of nearly two years before the mid-year population estimate is available for inclusion in standard spending assessments. The year shown at the head of the columns refers to the year of the calculated standard spending assessment.

Community Charge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans any measures to improve the ability of local councils to collect the outstanding community charge sums.

Mr. Portillo: We believe the enforcement powers now available to local authorities should enable them to collect the charge effectively. We are proposing some minor changes to the attachment of earnings process.

31 Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to take measures to ensure that armed forces personnel within the United Kingdom pay their community charge, and that those serving overseas may be exempted.

Mr. Key: Members of the armed forces are subject to the community charge and its enforcement procedures in the same way as everyone else. Although we do not intend specifically to exempt armed forces who serve overseas, those who do so and move their sole or main residence from this country will not be liable to pay the community charge.

Rents to Mortgages Scheme

20. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the areas where council tenants may turn their council rents into mortgages; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: This is a possibility that we shall want to keep under review as the pilot schemes progress.

National Rivers Authority

21. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the work and funding of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Trippier: The NRA is continuing to develop its role as a powerful and independent regulator and guardian of the water environment. It has been very substantially helped to do so by our making available a 28 per cent. increase in grant-in-aid in the current year compared with previous provision. It will also have available an estimated £25 million from the scheme of charges in respect of discharge consents which is now being implemented and extra income from abstraction licence holders.

Public Sector House Building

22. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for public sector house building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The latest estimates of public sector house building in England, mainly by local authorities, show 12,000 completions in the year to May 1991, of which 2,400 were in the latest three months.

Housing associations are becoming the major providers of new subsidised rented housing and their output is forecast to rise significantly over the next three years.

Full details of house building by sector are published monthly by the Department in an information bulletin.

Humberside

23. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the publication of the final report from the Local Government Boundary Commission on the future of the county of Humberside.

Mr. Key: The report was published on Wednesday 3 July.

Council House Sales

24. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in England since May 1979.

Mr. Heseltine: Between April 1979 and March 1991, about one and a quarter million tenants bought their homes from English local authorities and new towns.

Standard Spending Assessments

25. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make changes to the system for setting the levels of standard spending assessments for local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have no proposals for any major changes to the SSA methodology, although information from the 1991 census will be incorporated into SSAs as soon as it is available for all authorities.

Water Companies

26. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the water company chairmen to discuss the quality of their services.

Mr. Trippier: I met the chairmen of the water companies only last week. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside will meet the chairmen of the water and sewerage companies later in the year. The topics for discussion naturally include the unprecedented investment programme the industry is carrying out to improve the quality of its services.

Greenhouse Gases

27. Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about further progress on tackling the problem of greenhouse gases.

Mr. Baldry: The United Kingdom remains fully committed to the negotiation of an effective framework convention on climate change in time for it to be opened for signature at the June 1992 UN conference on environment and development. Reasonable progress towards this objective was made at the second meeting of the intergovernmental negotiating committee which took place in Geneva last month.

Local Authority Publications

28. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the powers of the district audit regarding the political content of local authority publications.

Mr. Key: The powers of the auditor in respect of illegal expenditure on political publications are the same as those which apply to any item of illegal expenditure. We believe that the auditor's powers in this area are sufficient and have no plans to review them at present.

Local Government (Employment)

29. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on employment in local government.

Mr. Key: The total number employed in local government in England has fallen by 4 per cent. since 1979.

That there has been an overall reduction is in large part due to Government action in abolishing the metropolitan counties and GLC, removing bus and airport companies from local authority control, and later removing polytechnics from local government.

The Government's policies both in encouraging councils to make use of the private sector through competitive tendering and in encouraging greater efficiency in the delivery of services should exert a strong downward pressure on staff numbers.

Dog Wardens

30. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of local authorities employ dog wardens; and how many prosecutions they have instituted.

Mr. Baldry: I am advised by the National Dog Warden Association that some 200 dog wardens are employed by local authorities, but some authorities employ more than one warden and others share a warden. Local authority dog wardens are responsible for enforcing a variety of dog control measures, including "poop scoop", dog ban and dogs on leads byelaws. There are no central records of the number of prosecutions.

Beach Pollution

32. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet the chairman of Anglian Water plc to discuss beach pollution.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend and I maintain regular contacts with the Anglian Water Company about progress on the bathing water improvement programme.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

33. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the extension of compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key), earlier today to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer).

Council Housing

34. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the quality of the management of council housing; and what information he has on the latest position with regard to (a) rent arrears, (b) empty properties and (c) council house sales.

Mr. Yeo: In 1989 the Department published a report by the centre for housing research, Glasgow university, entitled "The Nature and Effectiveness of Housing Management in England", which evaluated the economy, efficiency and effectiveness of local authorities and housing associations as landlords.

A follow-up study on the effectiveness of housing management under the new financial regimes for local authorities and housing associations is currently being carried out by the centre for housing studies, York university, and is due to report in 1992.

The latest available information on council tenants' arrears relates to the position at the end of March 1990. Estimated total rent arrears for all English local authorities at that date were £360 million.

The latest available information on empty council dwellings in England relates to 1 April 1990. At that date some 99,400 were vacant.

Some 1·3 million English local authority or new town properties have been sold into owner-occupation between April 1979 and March 1991. In addition 16 local authorities have transferred their remaining stock to housing associations or to private companies.

Short-term Leasing

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the value for money of short-term leasing of properties by housing authorities to accommodate the homeless as against bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Sir George Young: My assessment is that leasing is usually preferable both on social and cost grounds to the use of bed-and-breakfast hotels in accommodating homeless families.

Water Quality

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the changes in the level of quality of Britain's highest grade rivers since 1989.

Mr. Trippier: The National Rivers Authority intends to publish later this year the results of its 1990 river quality survey.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what progress has been made in setting water quality objectives under section 105 of the Water Act 1989;

(2) if he will make it his policy to include in future water quality objectives for inland waters provision for designation of contact water sport areas and to require such designated areas to meet the provisions of European Community directive 76/160/EEC concerning the quality of bathing water;

(3) which organisations have been asked to give their views on the new statutory water quality objectives;

(4) if he will make it his policy to publish the new water quality objectives before May 1992.

Mr. Trippier: We have asked the National Rivers Authority to advise the Department on the establishment of the new system of statutory water quality objectives provided for under the Water Act 1989. Discussions on this are continuing and proposals will be issued for public consultation in due course. The new arrangements will be consistent with the requirements of the relevant EC directives.

Discharges

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that all environmentally sensitive discharges with numeric limits should include absolute limits that may not be exceeded at any time.

Mr. Trippier: Last year the National Rivers Authority issued for public consultation its reviews of the discharge consent system. This covered a wide range of issues relating to consent setting and compliance, including the use of absolute limits. The NRA is currently considering the comments it has received.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases there have been of unauthorised discharges into the River Lea, Limehouse Cut, Hertford Union canal and Regents canal in the last 10 years, giving details of the source of the discharge and the quantities involved.

Mr. Baldry: Information on unauthorised discharges since 1989 is held by the National Rivers Authority, Thames region.

No information is available for the years prior to 1989.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for the last available year, the percentage of (i) paper, (ii) cardboard, (iii) ferrous metals, (iv) non-ferrous metals, (v) sump oil, (vi) mercury and (vii) cadmium recoverd as a percentage of consumption in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) each of the other European Community countries.

Mr. Baldry: The available figures are as follows:

(i) and (ii) the figures for 1989[1] are:

	Percentage
Belgium	35·2
Denmark	33·2
France	34·4
Germany	43·0
Greece	n/a
Ireland	n/a
Italy	25·7
Luxembourg	*
Netherlands	49·0
Portugal	39·1
Spain	38·7
United Kingdom	30·4

The figure for the United Kingdom in 1990 was 33 per cent.

(iii) the available figures (for domestic supply of scrap as a proportion of consumption of finished steel) for 1988[2] are:

	Percentage
Belgium	84·4
France	79·6
Germany	69·6
Italy	44·9
Netherlands	86·3
Spain	56·8
United Kingdom	74·7

(iv) the United Kingdom figure for aluminium is 42 per cent.[3], excluding the use of imported scrap.

The other figures are not held centrally and so cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Domestic Rates

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total amount of domestic rates remaining uncollected in April of each year since 1979 in Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Key: Information is available only for gross rate arrears, domestic and non-domestic combined, for the years since 1980.

Gross rate arrears at 1 April for Tower Hamlets

	£ 000s
1980	2,015
1981	1,723
1982	2,911
1983	3,147

1987	2,942
1988	5,443
1989	4,240
1990	6,709

Watercourse Pollution

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the comparative deleterious effects of the discharge of (a) cream, (b) alcohol and (c) raw sewage into fresh watercourses from processing and manufacturing plants.

Mr. Baldry: The control of discharges to freshwaters is a matter for the National Rivers Authority. In general discharges of cream, alcohol or raw sewage would be expected to have a deleterious effect on freshwaters and would therefore not be permitted.

Guest Houses

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many guest houses are registered to pay uniform business rates.

Mr. Key: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

House Building (Leicester)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in the private and the public sector were completed in the years 1979 and 1990, respectively, in the city of Leicester.

Mr. Yeo: The figures for 1979 are shown in table 4(b) of "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales", No. 59 (November 1981) and, for 1990, in table 1(a) of No. 97 (April 1991). Copies are in the Library.

Litter

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many litter abatement orders have been obtained and how many litter abatement notices have been served under the Environmental Protection Act 1990 in the three months since 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: This information not held centrally by my Department.

The number of orders made or notices served is not necessarily an indicator of the success, or failure, of the legislation. They are designed primarily as deterrent measures. We would expect aggrieved citizens to exercise their powers to seek litter abatement orders only as a last resort. In most cases, we envisage that the litter or refuse which is the subject of the complaint would be removed without the need for action in the courts. Similarly, we expect local authorities to use their powers to serve litter abatement notices only where persuasion to clear the litter or refuse in question has failed.

City Challenge

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will set out the basis for selection of the local authorities to be invited to submit bids in the second round of city challenge and the criteria he will use to assess the bids submitted.

Mr. Portillo: Our present intention is that those authorities which currently have urban programme status will be eligible to participate in the second round of city challenge. We shall draw on the experience gained in this year's pacemaker exercise to determine the criteria for assessing the bids in the second round.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will provide details of the sources of funding for the city challenge scheme in subsequent years and set out the impact of these funding arrangements on the existing urban programme administered through local authorities, as a whole, and on the individual allocations of local authorities.

Mr. Portillo: No decisions have yet been taken about the extent and timing of future competitions, beyond the present intention to hold a further competition in 1992 and so to distribute more of the Government's resources for inner cities on a competitive basis.

Planning Inspectorate

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to increase the number of inspectors within the planning inspectorate.

Mr. Yeo: Yes. We are currently taking on an additional 45 planning inspectors to deal with forecast workload in the coming years.

Satellite Dishes

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when revised permitted development rights for the installation of satellite dishes will come into force.

Mr. Yeo: My right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have today laid before the House the Town and Country Planning General Development (Amendment) Order 1991. This order will come into force on 31 July. It will:

(a) introduce stricter permitted development rights for the installation, alternation and replacement of satellite dishes;

(b) allow factory/warehouse extensions built as permitted development to be used for social or welfare purposes for employees, including creche facilities for their children;

(c) introduce permitted development rights to enable licensed operators of driver information systems to instal the necessary equipment, subject to size limitations; and

(d) include a statement of property owners'/agricultural tenants' rights on the certificates which an applicant for planning permission is required to serve on those who own or have an interest in land for which the application is made.

My right hon. Friends have also made the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) (Amendment) Order 1991, which places dry-cleaning establishments, but not launderettes, in the shops use class (A1) of the order. This order will also come into force on 31 July.

WALES

School Buildings Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, in 1990 prices, by local education authority, the level of capital spending on school buildings for each of the financial years since 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table. Figures for 1990-91 are not yet available.

Oral Health

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what incentives his Department employs to encourage everyone to visit a dental practitioner every six months.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The frequency of examination appropriate for maintaining oral health will vary from individual to individual depending on clinical circumstances. Both the new continuing care arrangements for adult patients and the capitation arrangements for child patients allow dentists the flexibility to give specific advice to patients to accommodate individual clinical needs.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance his Department has issued to schools in Wales regarding the effect of milk consumption on oral health.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None. However, general nutritional advice is issued by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many health authorities in Wales currently provide dental screening for (a) all pre-schools playgroup children, (b) primary and junior school children twice a year and (c) secondary school children annually.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: This information is not held centrally. However, district health authorities are required by WHC(89)28 to arrange and provide adequate resources to undertake the screening of the teeth of children in state-funded schools at least three times in each child's school life. In areas of poor dental health and where availability of general dental services is poor, such screening may need to be more frequent—where necessary, annually.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of funding his Department is making available in the current financial year for research into ways of improving the oral health of Welsh children and adults.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: During the financial year the Department has made available a total of £89,000 specifically for research into oral health in Wales. In addition, all district health authorities are currently funding oral screening and epidemiological studies.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to add fluoride to potable water supplies in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: None.

The 1985 Water (Fluoridation) Act provides for fluoridation of water supplies at the request of health authorities after a thorough publicity and consultation process. The Government believe it to be right that decisions should continue to be taken, as they have over the past 30 years, at a local rather than national level. In the final analysis it is the task of the district health authority to determine the benefit.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met representatives of the British Dental Association.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: As Minister with responsibility for health matters in the Principality I met representatives of the British Dental Associations General Dental Services Committee for Wales on 24 May. In addition, our officials are in regular touch with BDA representatives in Wales. The BDA also participates in the Welsh Dental Committee, which is the statutory advisory committee to the Secretary of State.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the information that his Department holds on the epidemiology of the dental health needs of children and adults in Wales both on an all-Wales basis and on specific geographical areas within Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The latest available data on adult dental health, prepared from surveys carried out by OPCS on behalf of the Health Departments, are published by HMSO in the document "Adult Dental Health 1988 United Kingdom." Annual reports on child dental health are published in the journal "Community Dental Health": the latest results appeared in vol. 8, No. 2, July 1991. These studies are co-ordinated by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry and are carried out by the staff of district health authorities' community dental services as part of their responsibility under circular WHC(89)28.

Standardised small district data are not held centrally. However, data are held by DHAs for assessing local health needs and it is intended that these should be published by districts as part of the report by their director of dental public health. The first reports are due to be prepared by September 1991 to inform the annual review meetings of each DHA.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish for each health authority in each of the past four years the funding for oral surgery that his Department has undertaken as part of the waiting list initiative.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is given in the following table:

District health authority	1987-88 £	1988-89 £	1989-90 £	1990-91 £
Clwyd	—	—	1,240	—
Gwynedd	6,500	13,880	16,600	—
Mid Glamorgan	11,400	—	—	—
West Glamorgan	—	—	7,300	—
TOTAL	17,900	13,880	25,150	—

No other health authority has received funding under the waiting times initiative for oral surgery in the last four years.

HIV

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance his Department has issued to dental practitioners regarding the treatment of patients infected with HIV hepatitis B.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is as follows:

CDO(86)3 drew the attention of dental practitioners to AIDS booklet 3 "Guidance for Surgeons, Anaesthetists, Dentists and Teams".

CDO(88)1 "Cross infection control".

HP 119/34/2 (1988). "AIDS infected health workers: report by the expert advisory group".

WHC(88)38 "AIDS Control (ACT) 1987" instruction to report on staff training regarding AIDS.

"Guidance for Clinical Health Care Workers: Protection Against Infection with HIV and Hepatitis Viruses", Issued January 1990 (issued under PSM(9)3).

Sports Fields

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the number of acres of school sports fields that have been sold by local education authorities since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The provision of adequate land to meet the needs of schools is the responsibility of local education authorities. Information about disposals of school sports fields by these authorities is not held centrally.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, columns 55-6, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign.

Mr. David Hunt: The 1991-92 Enterprise Wales and road safety campaigns started in April 1991 and will continue until March 1992.

Drug and alcohol misuse publicity is planned to commence in October 1991. A completion date for this activity has not yet been determined.

Teachers' Pay and Conditions

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of (a) nursery and primary schools, (b) middle schools and (c) secondary schools by size, according to the group sizes defined in the school teachers' pay and conditions document.

Sir Wyn Roberts [holding answer 4 July 1991]: The information as at January 1991 is given in the following table. There are no middle schools in Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Pension Age

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has made to the President of the European Commission regarding the Barber judgment and the extent to which retrospection will be limited when the judgment is applied; and if he will place a copy of his letter in the Library.

The Prime Minister: I have written to President Delors twice on this matter; first to express my concern about the financial and economic implications of the European Court of Justice's judgment in the Barber case; and then to inform him about the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security on 26 June at columns 997-1006.

The extent of the retrospective effect of the judgment is one of the aspects on which clarification is being sought from the European Court. We shall argue before the court that the judgment does not apply to benefits based on service before the date of the judgment.

It is not my usual practice to publish correspondence of this kind.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many, and what percentage of men aged 60, 61, 62, 63, 64 and 65 years are not in regular employment.

Mr. Jackson: Estimates from the 1990 Labour Force Survey are shown in the following table:

Men not in employment—Great Britain

Age	Numbers (thousands)	Per cent.
60	111	40·7
61	123	46·2
62	124	48·4
63	154	55·1
64	169	62·6
65	210	82·0

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 72, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign.

Mr. Jackson [pursuant to his answer, 1 July 1991, Official Report, column 72]: Press advertising for career development loans is planned to start in late July and run until September. Press advertising for the national training awards winners announcement is due to start on November 30 and to run for one week.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the last annual report for each agency in his Department was published; and when the next ones are due;

(2) what is the maximum salary payable to the chief executive of each agency in his Department; and what is the length of their contracts;

(3) if he will list the new forms of working patterns introduced into each agency in his Department since its establishment; and if he will break down by grade the numbers of staff taking up each new working pattern;

(4) how many staff were in post on the date that each agency in his Department was established; and how many staff are in post now;

(5) whether any appointments from the private sector have been made to any agency in his Department at grade 7 or above since its establishment;

(6) what is the first degree obtained by the chief executive of each agency in his Department; and from which institution;

(7) if he will list those facilities for staff which have been introduced in each agency in his Department since its establishment;

(8) if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each agency in his Department since its establishment; and if he will identify those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status;

(9) whether a group bonus scheme is in operation in any agency in his Department;

(10) how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each agency in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The chief executives of our agencies—the Passport Agency and the Forensic Science Service—will be writing to the hon. Member about this. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Dog Attacks

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of attacks on people by dogs have been recorded by the Metropolitan police in Tower Hamlets in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Metropolitan police have kept records of incidents involving dangerous dogs only since November 1989, but there are no figures relating solely to Tower Hamlets. However, I am informed that, in the force area which includes Tower Hamlets, 38 incidents involving dogs have been noted since records began.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 4, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each advertising campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Officials are working on proposals for the next crime prevention and fire safety television advertising campaigns. Timing and duration will depend on our assessment of what time of year offers the best value for money.

Plans for non-television advertising publicity campaigns costing more than £100,000 are as follows:

Campaign	Start date	Duration
ELECTORAL REGISTRATION
General Registration	Mid September 1991	Approximately 1 month
Absent Voting	When a general election is mounted	2-3 days
CIVIL PROTECTION MAGAZINE	Every quarter	Throughout the year
POLICE RECRUITMENT
Graduate	1 September 1991	4 months
Ethnic	1 April 1991—Continuation from campaign which started in March 1991.	3 weeks
POLICE
Special Constables Recruitment:
Tactical	31 July 1991	3 months—11 selected force areas—Part of a month per force.
Awareness	1 April 1991—Continuation from campaign which started in January 1991. There is a range of print material available both during the Campaign periods and throughout the year.	1 month—Post campaign research will determine whether further advertising will be required in this financial year but this will not take place before November 1991.
Crime Prevention	1 April 1991	This comprises a range of publicity material that is generally available year-round.
Fire Prevention and Safety	1 April 1991	A full range of publicity material is available all year-round.
Fire Safety Week	14 October 1991	5 days—Specific print material will be made available in support of National Fire Safety Week.
Passports	September/October	Not confirmed.
Prison Service Recruitment	Autumn	Up to 3 months.

I will take this opportunity to correct an error in the table covering non-television publicity campaigns in the answer of 1 July at column 4. The figure for fire prevention and safety should be £1,064,000 and not £2,064,000. The other £1 million is accounted for by the television fire safety advertising mentioned above the table.

Emergency Planning Review

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the review of emergency planning which was announced on 16 October 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My predecessor said in his statement on 16 October last year that he had received a report from Mr. David Brook, his civil emergencies adviser, on the role of local authorities in peacetime emergencies; and that he would be considering the report in conjunction with a review of the options for the future of our civil defence arrangements in the light of developments in east-west relations. This would enable us to consider whether a more coherent approach to emergency planning for the protection of the public in both peace and war could be achieved.

The Government's commitment to civil defence remains firm. For our civil defence arrangements to continue to be relevant and effective the planning assumptions on which they are based must reflect the realities of international relations. Current civil defence planning concentrates on the effects of a major nuclear attack on the United Kingdom. The Government have decided that in future such civil defence plans should be maintained in such a state that they could be brought to full readiness within a period of three months. Essential plans should be capable of being put into effect within seven days. These assumptions will be kept under regular review.

This change has to be viewed in the wider context of an international situation that remains troubled and far from risk-free. With the now reduced risk of nuclear conflict the Government believe that the time is right to develop more flexible civil defence arrangements. This approach will require a closer correlation between contingency plans for civil defence and peacetime emergencies.

In his report Mr. Brook, the civil emergencies adviser, points to a number of shortcomings in local authority arrangements for dealing with peacetime disasters. Some local authorities are effective in their planning; others less so. Mr. Brook has identified particular problems of inadequate planning and co-ordination in some metropolitan areas. He has recommended to me that there should be new legislation on civil protection which would include a statutory duty on local authorities to plan, train and exercise for their role in mitigating the effects of peacetime disasters.

I am placing a summary of Mr. Brook's report in the Library.

It is clearly unacceptable that some local authorities should be inadequately prepared to deal with a major peacetime emergency and I agree with Mr. Brook that the shortcomings that he has identified must be rectified. However, while I do not rule out the possibility of legislation in the longer term, there are obvious difficulties in introducing legislation affecting the duties of local authorities at a time when local government reorganisation is in prospect. I propose therefore to seek improvements in peacetime planning in the first instance by measures which are open to me under existing legislation. These changes will also bear positively on our arrangements for civil defence.

It is against this background that I have taken the following decisions.

I will seek to achieve improvements in local authority planning for emergencies in peace and war through a package of measures. These will include the issue of central guidance on the handling of peacetime emergencies; a review of the organisation of emergency planning within metropolitan areas; and a more flexible use of civil defence grant for local authorities to ensure a more broadly based planning. Mr. Brook already has the first of these measures in hand. On the second I will be asking officials to consider how arrangements in metropolitan areas can be improved within the existing statutory framework. The aim would be to involve the metropolitan districts and London boroughs in the planning process more than is sometimes the case at present.

Local authority civil defence planning will in future be based on the more flexible approach I have already described. Its aims will be to ensure that all local authorities are able to continue to deliver the services for which they are responsible in peacetime in a wide range of possible civil defence emergencies. It will therefore be more relevant to peacetime disasters. I also propose to encourage local authorities to take full advantage of the provisions in existing legislation which permits the use of civil defence resources to carry out planning for peacetime disasters, provided that the Home Office is satisfied that they are making reasonable progress with civil defence planning.

This approach should secure better value for money from civil defence grant to local authorities and, provided that this is forthcoming, I shall give a measure of protection to the grant within what will inevitably be a diminishing total expenditure on civil defence. But I shall expect local authorities to continue to make a contribution to emergency planning from their own resources; and I will be ready to withhold grant from any local authority which is inefficient in its use of grant or seeks to evade its civil defence responsibilities.

A new system will be developed to monitor the changes in local authority planning, for which new objectives will be set. Local authorites will be given guidance in due course.

I have concluded that while there is a continuing need for protected local authority emergency centres, the existing requirement for two such emergency centres in each county and one in each district is no longer realistic. I therefore intend to set a new minimum requirement of one protected centre per county. I shall give further consideration, in consultation with local authorities, to the future of existing protected centres above this new minimum.

The new civil defence planning assumptions, and the more flexible approach to civil defence which I wish to see developed, will require the further development of the emergency communications network. I am now prepared to extend the network to district council offices and to county council offices in those places where the protected emergency centre is remotely located. The rate at which this can be achieved will depend on the availability of resources.

I have also looked at the role of the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation, including the Royal Observer Corps, taking into account changing civil defence requirements. I have decided that the arrangements for monitoring details of nuclear bursts and radioactive fall-out in wartime must be restructured. Certain of UKWMO's functions in this area will be carried out by central Government and integrated with existing local authority plans and responsibilities for monitoring in the field. We will be discussing with local authorities the implementation of these proposals.

I have therefore concluded with regret that the Home Office can no longer justify the continued use of the ROC and Home Department volunteers for the monitoring task.

It has therefore been decided, following consultations between the Home Office and the Ministry of Defence, who share responsibilities for the ROC, that the Corps will be stood down in its operational role.

I must take this opportunity to pay tribute to the loyal and dedicated service the full-time officers and volunteers of the ROC have given over 36 years. The considerable time and effort invested by the members of the Corps is a measure of their commitment and professionalism. I should also recognise the dedication and hard work of the Home Office volunteers who have been involved in monitoring. I did not take lightly the decision to dispense with their, nor the ROC's, services. I am aware that they have all earned our gratitude and respect.

My officials are currently reviewing the arrangements for warning taking into account possible peacetime needs and costs. I hope to make a further announcement soon.

Since more time will be available in future to activate civil defence plans the level of day-to-day police and fire service war planning can be reduced. Preliminary discussions have already been held with the relevant police and fire service committees to work out how this is best achieved.

These new arrangements will provide a major opportunity to improve arrangements for the protection of the public in peace and war. They will be developed by my Department in full consultation with those responsible for putting them into effect within the broad framework that I have set out in this statement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing and Community Charge Benefits

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing, with columns for English regions and England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland an analysis of those elements of table 2 of Cm 1514 which are included within the housing and community charge benefits totals in table 3 of Cm 1514.

Miss Widdecombe: Figures in Cm 1514 relate to Great Britain; information concerning Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

All benefit elements of table 2 of Cm 1514 are included within the housing and community charge benefit totals in table 3 of Cm 1514, and the administration elements of table 2 are included in the grand total of social security spending line of table 3. Information about English regions could be obtained only at disproportionate cost; the requested information for England, Scotland and Wales is in the table.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table reconciling for the years 1985-86 to 1990-91 the figures for England, Scotland and Wales for housing and community charge benefits, as given in table 3 of Cm 1514, with those for housing benefits, as given in the Official Report, 28 March, column 516.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to publish such a table because the information given in column 516 of the Official Report for 28 March was taken from the 1989 public expenditure White Paper (Cm 621), and is based on local authority returns which are subject to adjustment. The information given in table 3 of the departmental report (Cm 1514) is more recent and therefore includes subsequent adjustments.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, with columns for English regions and England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland an analysis of social security expenditure consistent with table 3 of Cm 1514.

Miss Widdecombe: Figures in Cm 1514 relate to Great Britain; information concerning Northern Ireland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) when the last annual report for the Resettlement Agency was published; and when the next one is due;

(2) when the last annual report for the Information Technology Services Agency was published; and when the next one is due;

(3) when the last annual report for the Benefits Agency was published; and when the next one is due;

(4) when the last annual report for the Contributions Agency was published; and when the next one is due.

Miss Widdecombe: The chief executive of each of the Department's executive agencies will write to the hon. Member with the information requested and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the quality of service performance indicators adopted by each agency in his Department since its establishment as an executive agency; and if he will identify separately those quality of service performance indicators already operative prior to agency status.

Miss Widdecombe: The targets set for the Department's four executive agencies—the Benefits Agency, Contributions Agency, Information Technology Services Agency and Resettlement Agency—are set out in each agency's business plan, copies of which are in the Library.

We have for some time set quality of service targets covering many aspects of the service that we provide for our customers. Since their establishment, a new customer satisfaction target has been set for the Benefits Agency, and the Contributions Agency has been set new targets for the registration of personal pension applications and for the handling of inquiries from employers and contributors and about personal pensions.

Family Credit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are refused family credit because at the time of their claim they are receiving statutory sick pay and are therefore not deemed to be undertaking remunerative work.

Mr. Jack: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that during the quarter to the end of June 1991 18,057 claims for family credit were disallowed on the grounds that no member of the family was engaged in remunerative work. Separate information is not available as to how many of those were cases where people were receiving statutory sick pay.

Attendance Allowance Unit, Blackpool

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will take steps to ensure that his Department's attendance allowance unit, North Fylde Central office, Norcross, Blackpool FY5 3TA, responds with expedition to correspondence from members of the public; and if he will ensure that an acknowledgement card is sent at an early date;

(2) what is the average wait a member of the general public experiences before a reply is received from the attendance allowance unit, Department of Social Security, North Fylde central office, Norcross, Blackpool FY5 3TA.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information office.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what regulations govern the payment of family credit to families where the breadwinner is receiving statutory sick pay.

Mr. Jack: The relevant regulations arise out of the basic qualifying condition for family credit in section 20(5)(b) of the Social Security Act 1986 that a person must be "engaged and normally engaged in remunerative work". The circumstances in which a person is or is not to be treated as engaged or normally engaged in remunerative work are prescribed in the Family Credit (General) Regulations 1987, as amended, including the requirement in regulation 5(1) that a person shall be treated as engaged in remunerative work only if he carries out activities in the course of his work for not less than 24 hours in the week of the claim or in either of the two weeks immediately preceding the week of the claim, and he is employed at the date of the claim.

Section 20(6) of the Act provides that family credit awards last for 26 weeks and are unaffected by changes of circumstances during that period, so that if a person who is already receiving family credit becomes sick, his award will continue unchanged to the end of the 26-week period irrespective of whether statutory sick pay becomes payable.

Benefits

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what other benefits families unable to claim family credit because the breadwinner is off work sick are able to claim.

Mr. Jack: Employees who are off work sick may be entitled to statutory sick pay from their employer. If there is no entitlement to SSP, or title has run out, sickness/invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance, including dependency additions where appropriate, may be claimed. Subject to the family's circumstances, there may also be entitlement to income support, housing benefit and community charge benefit.

Income Support

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support in each Newcastle social security office have arrangements for (1) direct payment of housing costs, (2) attachment of community charge, (3) direct re-payments to the social fund, (4) direct payments to the electricity companies and (5) direct payments to British Gas.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Social Fund

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements exist to ensure that items for which social fund loans or grants have been made are not subject to distraint by bailiffs seeking community charge arrears.

Mr. Scott: After they have obtained a court order to recover arrears, local authorities may ask the Department to make deductions from income support, which most social fund applicants receive. Distraint is one of the other options available to local authorities, and bailiffs will be guided by the general law on distraint.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints have been received from members of the public in respect of the low-level aerobatic display performed by a Tornado F-3 aircraft at Royal Air Force Leeming on 26 June.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: One.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of complaints received from members of the public within a 25 mile radius of Royal Air Force Leeming since Tornado squadrons have been stationed by year since 1988 to the latest date he has available for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Central records are not maintained in a form that would enable the information sought to be provided.

Service Men (Executions)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates and locations of each execution of British service men since 1961, with the offence in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No British service men have been executed since 1961.

Aerobatic Display, Whitby Regatta

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that the Royal Air Force Red Arrows aerobatic team should provide a display for the regatta in Whitby, North Yorkshire as a duty engagement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Requests for displays by the Red Arrows are considered on an annual basis. The Red Arrows are scheduled to appear at the Whitby regatta on 10 August 1991, but no commitments can be made regarding future years.

Injured Grenadiers

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated present value equivalent award of the sum he gave to the House in the Adjournment debate on 3 June, Official Report, column 136, assuming death occurs at age 25, 35, 45 and 55 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The estimated present value equivalent awards would be as follows:

Death occurring at age 25	17,700
Death occurring at age 35	73,000
Death occurring at age 45	110,000
Death occurring at age 55	134,000

Anglo-French Co-operation (Training)

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military service personnel are studying in French defence colleges; and how many French military service personnel are studying in British defence colleges.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This year four British service personnel and four French service personnel are attending courses at defence colleges in France and the United Kingdom respectively.

ASLP Missile System

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department is having with the French Defence Ministry about the development of the ASLP missile system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are studying both United States and French systems as possible replacements for the WE177 free-fall nuclear bomb. The ASLP missile is being considered in this context, and we are maintaining contact with the French Ministry of Defence as necessary.

RAF Boxer Network

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the total cost of the RAF Boxer network.

Mr. Alan Clark: The estimated cost of the RAF Boxer network, including all associated works services, is £230 million at 1991 economic conditions.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to how many local planning authorities he has submitted notices of proposed development in respect of the Boxer network; and if he will publish a list of those authorities.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has submitted notices of proposed development to 92 local planning authorities in respect of the Boxer network. I am unable to provide a list of these authorities for the reasons I gave to my hon. Friend in my reply of 12 June 1991, Official Report, column 606-7.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 82, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Royal Navy

Production of a television recruiting advertisement and television advertising campaign—planned for four weeks in September-October 1991.

Army

Television recruiting campaign—24 June to 15 July 1991.
Cinema recruiting campaign—3 August to mid-October 1991.
Press campaign in support of above—mid July for two months.

Territorial Army

Combined TV-Press recruiting campaign highlighting the range of week-end activities in the Territorial Army—four weeks in October 1991 and in February 1992.
A press campaign to recruit specialist personnel—four weeks in October 1991 and in February 1992.

Tri-service

Press campaign to thank employers for releasing Volunteer Reserve Forces personnel during the Gulf crisis—18-23 June 1991.
Campaign to increase public awareness of Volunteer Reserve Forces and employers' support for them—four weeks in November-December 1991.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to establish further city technology colleges in Stockton, Middlesbrough and Hartlepool.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans for the establishment of further city technology colleges in Stockton, Middlesbrough or Hartlepool. However, he would be willing to consider such proposals on their merits. In the meantime Macmillan college Teesside provides an excellent example of the benefits of a CTC education for pupils in Cleveland.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consider alternative methods by which schools applying for grant-maintained status may become city technology colleges.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 3 July, we intend to create a new kind of school by enabling existing LEA-maintained and grant-maintained schools to apply to become grant-maintained technology schools and colleges. These will incorporate the key characteristics of city technology colleges. They will focus on technology in relation to any area of the curriculum and receive financial support from private sector sponsors.

Territorial Officials

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of territorial officers in his Department, together with their location, grades, the territories they cover and their total cost; and if he will make a statement on their duties.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 189 officers in the Department from grade 7 downwards have duties organised wholly or partly on a territorial basis. Their duties vary with the nature of the post, but broadly consist of liaison on a range of matters with a number of authorities or institutions in a specific geographical area. The estimated total cost is £3,250,000 per annum.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of local education authorities which are operating policies of minimal statementing with regard to pupils who may have special educational needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fallon: We have no evidence that local education authorities are operating policies of minimal statementing irrespective of the needs of individual children. Where a child's needs are so assessed and the outcome of that assessment leads the local education authority to conclude that they should determine the special educational provision to be made for him they must make a statement of his special educational needs.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether any action has been taken against any local education authority with regard to its implementation of those parts of the Education Act 1981 which refer to children with special needs.

Mr. Fallon: My right hon. and learned Friend receives appeals under sections 5(6) and 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 and complaints under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944 in relation to the discharge by local education authorities of their duties under the Education Act 1981. He has powers of direction under both Acts which he uses in appropriate cases.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many complaints under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944 he has received since 1 April 1983 in respect of local education authorities refusing to undertake assessments of children's needs under section 5 of the Education Act 1981; and in how many cases he has found in the complainant's favour and instructed the local education authority to undertake formal assessment.

Mr. Fallon: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many complaints under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944 and appeals under section 8 of the Education Act 1981 he has received since 1 April 1983 in relation to local education authorities' failure to specify in sufficient detail the provision to be made under section 3 of a statement to meet a child's special educational needs; and in how many of these cases he has instructed local education authorities to redraft the relevant section 3.

Mr. Fallon: Between April 1983 and December 1990 there have been 246 appeals in England under section 8(6) of the Education Act 1981. Decisions have been reached in 168 cases. In 44 of these cases the Secretary of State has amended the special educational provision specified in the child's statement.

Information about the number of complaints received under sections 68 and 99 of the Education Act 1944 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals he has received in each year since 1983 relating to section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 against a local education authority's decision not to issue a statement of special educational needs; and in how many of these cases he has upheld the parents' appeal and instructed a local education authority to issue a statement.

Mr. Fallon: Between April 1983 and December 1990 there have been 259 appeals in England under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981. The following table lists by year the number of appeals received and the number of cases where the Secretary of State directed the local education authority to reconsider its decision not to issue a statement of special educational needs.

Year	Appeals received	LEA directed to reconsider
1984	19	0
1985	21	0
1986	28	3
1987	36	2
1988	37	6
1989	50	2
1990	64	12

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he treats as learning difficulty as set out in legislation; and what he treats as special educational needs which can be met from provision ordinarily available in schools.

Mr. Fallon: The term learning difficulty is defined in the Education Act 1981. A child has a learning difficulty if he has a significantly greater difficulty in learning than the majority of children of his age; or he has a disability which either prevents or hinders him from making use of educational facilities of a kind generally provided in schools, within the area of the local authority concerned, for children of his age; or he is under the age of five years and is, or would be if special educational provision were not made for him, likely to have learning difficulties as just described when over that age.

It is for individual local education authorities to decide which special educational needs can be met from provision ordinarily available in their schools.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what advice his Department gives on the role of parents in contributing to and challenging the outcome of non-statutory assessment procedures for children's special educational needs;

(2) what guidance he gives on the form of non-statutory assessment of children with special needs for whom section 5 assessment is not thought appropriate.

Mr. Fallon: The procedures for non-statutory assessments, including arrangements for the involvement of parents, are the responsibility of local education authorities. The Department is currently funding a project called "Partnership in Assessment". The project is being undertaken by the Voluntary Council for Handicapped Children and is intended to identify good practice for parental involvement in the assessment of children with special educational needs.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the schools in which observations of work with pupils with statements of special educational need formed the basis of the comment which accompanies the table in annexe A of his Department's circular No. 11/90.

Mr. Fallon: The table at annexe A of DES circular 11/90 is derived from observations made by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools of classroom work which they saw as promoting effective learning and care for various groups of pupils. Account was taken of group size, availability of staff and to some extent the total intensity of demand made upon staff by the group as a whole. These observations were gathered from many school inspections carried out over a number of years.

Court Judgments

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the criteria on which his Department decides which court judgments to publicise via the circulation of letters to chief education officers.

Mr. Fallon: Letters relating to court judgments are sent to chief education officers in cases where there are important implications for local education authorities' future practice.

National Curriculum

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to prevent the language in the national curriculum report from being used in teacher-training and other educational establishments.

Mr. Eggar: Language in the national curriculum materials should be used only in the context of in-service training programmes, where materials can be discussed and challenged. They were not designed for and are not for use in the classroom.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the principal authors and institutions with which his Department contracted in respect of the language in the national curriculum project and report, together with the sums paid to each.

Mr. Eggar: The Department's contract for the production of the training materials and the central co-ordination of the training programme was placed with the university of Nottingham, at a cost of some £120,000. The project is under the direction of Professor Ronald Carter, who took full editorial responsibility for the training package.

The LINC project itself included a central Government grant to support LEA expenditure of £21 million over three years. These funds were provided under the education support grant programme to assist the introduction of the national curriculum.

1991 Public Expenditure Survey

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils relating to the 1991 public expenditure survey;

(2) whether he has received the advice of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils relating to the 1991 public expenditure survey; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received from the chairman of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils concerning publication of the board's advice relating to the 1991 public expenditure survey.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. and learned Friend received the Advisory Board for the Research Council's advice on this year's public expenditure survey on 8 May. He intends, as last year, to treat the advice on a confidential basis, in common with the corresponding advice which he receives from the Universities Funding Council and the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council. He has received no representations from the chairman of the ABRC about publication of the board's advice on the 1991 survey.

Contracts (Quality Requirements)

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department inserts quality requirements into contracts awarded to academic institutions which would enable him to recover moneys spent on inadequate work.

Mr. Eggar: The Department uses a standard form of contract for education research projects which includes appropriate forms of protection for its interests and the use of the taxpayer's money. These include the specification of the work to be performed and its timing; provisions for inspection and steering of the work; control over the product of the study; and arrangements for early termination when needed. Payments are usually made in arrears depending on progress made.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, columns 43-44, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each advertising campaign.

Mr. Eggar: The teacher recruitment campaign was launched on 1 July. Television advertising for this campaign will last for a period of three weeks and advertisements in the national press for four weeks. In addition, in the autumn, advertisements will appear in the national press for four weeks and in cinemas in slected towns during six alternating weeks. The exact dates for these have yet to be decided.

It is unlikely that the publicity campaign to provide parents with information about changes in the education system will include any paid advertising. The timing and duration of this campaign has yet to be decided.

The professional, industrial and commercial updating (PICKUP) programme does not involve advertising.

National Curriculum Council

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future organisation of the National Curriculum Council.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As the National Curriculum Council moves into the next phase of its work, I see advantage in separating the roles of chairman and chief executive. Mr. Duncan Graham has himself seen this stage of the process as a time for change and he will retire from the NCC with effect from 19 August. From that date I am appointing Mr. David Pascall as part-time chairman of the National Curriculum Council. The appointment will be for one year in the first instance, renewable thereafter. Mr. Pascall is manager of BP Exploration Control and Business Simplification Programmes. He has been a member of the council since August 1990. It will be for the council to appoint a full-time chief executive, with my approval, under the provisions of schedule 2 to the Education Reform Act 1988.

HEALTH

Discharge Arrangements

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department has taken in monitoring the implementation of health circular 89/5 on discharge arrangements.

Mr. Dorrell: It is for regions to ensure that district health authorities implement the procedures for discharge set out in health circular 89(5), a copy of which is available in the Library. Action by special health authorities is being followed up by the Department through the quality control and business planning process.

Hospital Patients

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated in hospitals by the national health service in 1961 and in 1990.

Mr. Dorrell: The method of collecting in-patient case statistics changed in 1988-89. Until that date statistics were collected on discharges and deaths from hospital. From 1988-89 they were collected as "finished consultant episodes" and included well babies who had formerly been excluded. The relevant figures are:

Cases treated in NHS hospitals

	Discharges and deaths	Finished consultant episodes
1961	4,035,000	—
1988-89	6,586,000	7,335,000
1989-90	—	7,477,000

AIDS

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to publish statistics on the spread of AIDS in inner cities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The spread of the human immunodeficiency virus which is the cause of AIDS can be monitored through voluntary confidential reports on AIDS and HIV infection received by the Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre. CDSC is currently analysing this by inner-city areas and such information should be available during the autumn of this year.

The first results from the anonymised HIV surveys, published on 17 May, indicated that the overall prevalence of HIV infection in women attending certain ante-natal clinics in inner London is one in 500. Among people attending certain sexually transmitted disease clinics in inner London prevalance is one in 500 among heterosexual women, one in 100 heterosexual men and one in five for homosexual-bisexual men. Further results will be published as they become available.

Life Expectancy

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current estimate for the life expectancy of males and females at birth for each district health authority; and what was the estimate for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths and discharges there were from national health service hospitals in Tower Hamlets with the principal diagnosis relating to alcohol for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list hospital and ward closures in Tower Hamlets for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to Mr. Richard Brew, the chairman of Tower Hamlets health authority, for details.

Senile Dementia

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each district health authority in London the number of people suffering from senile dementia aged (a) up to 65 years of age, (b) 66 to 75 years, (c) 76 to 85 years and (d) over 86 years.

Mr. Dorrell: This information is not available centrally.

Artificial Limbs

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued by his Department to district health authorities on their responsibility to provide artificial limbs and appliances for those people who need them.

Mr. Dorrell: Our planning guidance to health authorities over the last three years has drawn attention to these services as they transferred from central management to local control. We have emphasised the importance of maintaining them by ring-fencing their budget until April 1993. We also announced last week the setting up of an advisory group on rehabilitation: one of its tasks will be to monitor this area.

Hip Replacements

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hip replacement operations have taken place since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is given in the table. The total does not include figures for 1987-88 as reliable data for this period are not available centrally. The figure for 1988-89 is estimated and may be revised following further analysis.

Estimated number of principal operations performed, ordinary admissions and day cases, NHS hospitals, England, 1979 to 1988-89

All patients total hip replacement and other arthroplasty of hip

	Number
1979	28,788
1980	31,660
1981	32,775
1982	33,171
1983	36,232
1984	36,926
1985	36,539
1986	41,000
1988-89	41,947
Total	319,038

NHS Trusts

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans exist for monitoring standards of care within national health service trusts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: District health authorities and fund-holding GPs, as purchasers of services, will set quality standards as part of their contracts with hospitals and other units, whether NHS trusts or directly managed units. Community health councils will continue to have access to trusts within their area of responsibility.

Continence Services

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the report of the review of continence services.

Mr. Dorrell: We have now received the report, "An Agenda for Action on Continence Services", and have placed copies in the Library. The report sets out information on the current state of continence services. It concludes that while there are examples of well-planned and co-ordinated local services, their availability is patchy. It identifies the key features of an effective local service and recommends that these should form the basis of planning and service delivery in all health districts and local authority areas in accordance with established departmental guidelines. It also recommends central action over the next few years to promote greater professional and public awareness of continence problems and the scope for tackling them, and to commission and disseminate the results of research to evaluate selected service patterns.

Copies of the report will be sent to health service managers and directors of social services with a letter emphasising the key messages for local service planning and provision.

We will take steps to implement the report's recommendations, for example—research on cost effectiveness and extending the training of nurses and other health professionals.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress towards establishing his Department's medicines control agency as an executive agency.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am pleased to announce that the Medicines Control Agency will be established as the second executive agency of the Department of Health on 11 July. The agency's role is to act on behalf of Ministers, the licensing authority, to safeguard public health by controlling medicines. It does this through a system of licensing, classification, monitoring and enforcement which ensures that medicines are of acceptable standards of safety, quality and efficacy. The agency's detailed aim, objectives and functions are set out in a framework document, copies of which will be placed in the Library. In accordance with next steps principles, the agency will be free to propose further adaptations to it if changing circumstances make this appropriate.

The chief executive has been set a number of key performance targets for 1991-92. These cover:

—standards of safety and quality;
—standards of service
—standards of financial control and efficiency.

A copy of the agency's business plan, in which the targets are detailed, will be placed in the Library.

Over the coming years, I will be setting the agency a range of performance targets to ensure that it continues to deliver improvements in the quality and efficiency of its work in the interests of the public health.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those district health authorities which currently provide an occupant-controlled powered outdoor wheelchair to disabled people who require one; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: A pilot study in northern and north western regions during 1989-90 confirmed the obvious value of powered indoor-outdoor wheelchairs for those able to benefit from them. We expect district health authorities, which have the responsibility for meeting the health needs of their populations, to extend their introduction wherever priorities allow. We do not collect the information centrally.

Dentistry

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from learned societies in dentistry and anaethesiology regarding the appropriateness of out-patient general anaesthesia in dental practice outside hospital; if he will place both the representations he has received and his response in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The 29 learned bodies listed in the table submitted comments on a report to the standing dental advisory committee by an expert working party in general anaesthesia, sedation and resuscitation in dentistry. The report recommended that, while the use of general anaesthesia should be avoided wherever possible, it should continue to be available outside hospitals, provided certain standards are maintained. This principle was generally endorsed by the learned bodies which commented, as were many of the detailed recommendations.

The report was issued as a consultation document. It is currently being considered in the light of the 138 responses received.

Duromine

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he is satisfied with the safety of the drug Duromine; and what evidence he has of adverse short-term side effects among patients taking it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following the introduction of licensing of medicinal products, the safety of Duromine, an established product, was reviewed and a reviewed product licence was issued in 1984. The licensed use is restricted to short-term administration as an adjunct to the treatment of moderate to severe obesity of some patients for whom close control and supervision should be provided. As the product is a prescription medicine, it would be used only after the prescriber had weighed the expected benefit against the possible risks to the particular patient. I am satisfied that the product, when used in accordance with the licensed particulars, should not expose the patient to an unacceptable level of risk.

Potentially, any drug may cause side-effects which may be minor or more serious. The established side-effects that are associated with a licensed medicinal product are detailed in the licence and are provided to prescribers in the data sheet distributed by the company marketing the product. The Committee on Safety of Medicines encourages prescribers to report serious adverse reactions which they suspect may have been due to an established drug and all reactions to new drugs. In the case of Duromine, there have been 61 reports of suspected adverse reactions since 1966; reactions are not classified into long and short-term effects. The report of an adverse reaction does not necessarily imply a causal effect. Information on adverse effects to Duromine is also to be found in published medical literature.

Epilepsy

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the specific assistance provided by his Department for people suffering from epilepsy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: Health authorities have a duty to assess the health needs in their areas and to make provision. They provide a range of services for people with epilepsy; these are complemented by local authority social services. Responsibility for providing services rests with these local bodies rather than directly with the Department.

Trading Agencies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost, both capital and revenue, of moving the Northern regional health authority engineering design group trading agency to new premises.

Mr. Dorrell: This is a matter for the Northern regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Carr, the chairman of the Northern regional health authority, for details.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to health authorities covering the conflicts of interest both of organisations and individual staff where non-national health service agencies assume the management responsibility for national health service trading agencies; and whether these non-national health service agencies are subject to the scrutiny of the Audit Commission.

Mr. Dorrell: Management responsibility for national health service trading agencies rests with the national health service. Where officials have been seconded to NHS trading agencies from the private sector they are accountable to senior NHS management.

Publicity Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 54, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign.

Mr. Dorrell: Current phases of the publicity campaigns listed in my reply to the hon. Member of 1 July at column 54 began in April 1991 and are all ongoing with the exception of "The Health of the Nation" Green Paper campaign which will end by 31 October 1991.

Fluoridation

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) Official Report, 27 June, column 547, for what reason Yorkshire Water ceased to supply fluoridated water on 31 October 1989.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 July 1991]: Yorkshire Water informed Huddersfield district health authority on 18 April 1989 that it was withdrawing from the agreement to fluoridate water supplied by the Longwood and Holmbridge/Digley water treatment works because at the time agreement had not yet been reached with Government about the wording of a suitable guarantee/indemnity against any costs or liabilities which water undertakers might incur. Subsequently the water industry accepted the form of indemnity which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was empowered to provide under the Water Act 1989.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table otherwise comparable to that provided in his answer of 17 April, Official Report, columns 184-85, to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) showing reductions in payment per year in successive increments of £10 from £0 to £140 for (i) charge payers and (ii) pensioners.

Mr. Portillo The information requested is given in the table.

Waste Incineration

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East of 2 July, how much of the special waste produced in the United Kingdom annually is disposed of by incineration.

Mr. Baldry: My Department's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics No. 13" published by HMSO in 1991 included in figure 5·3 an estimate that about 5 per cent. of the special waste produced in the United Kingdom in 1988 was disposed of by incineration. This figure is probably typical for any 12-month period in recent years.

Parish Election Expenses

Mr. Bellotti: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue regulations to effect the release of money held by district councils on account for parish councils to be used by them for parish election expenses.

Mr. Key: The treatment of any money held by district councils relating to balances on parish accounts is a matter for the authorities concerned.

Planning Inquiries

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on the lastest year's figures available for England and Wales what were the mean, median, longest and shortest lengths of time that were taken to make a decision about whether or not to issue a call-in notice under section 77 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, previously section 35 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, following an article 14 direction.

Mr. Yeo: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Planning Applications

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on the latest year's figures available for England and Wales, how many planning applications were subject to an article 14 direction; how many were subsequently the subject of a call-in under section 77 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, previously section 35 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, and what both these figures were as a percentage of the total number of planning applications submitted.

Mr. Yeo: In England in 190-91, a total of 182 article 14 directions were made; 70 planning applications were called in following such directions; a total of 532,000 planning applications were received by local planning authorities. In Wales in the same year, the corresponding figures were 13; 2; 39,000.

Planning applications which were the subject of article 14 directions or were called in by my right hon. Friends in 1990-91 were not necessarily received by local planning authorities in the same year.

Standard Spending Assessments

Sir Richard Luce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 587, if he will set out in detail the formulae for the criteria which are required in assessing the standard spending assessment for a district council.

Mr. Portillo: The formulae for assessing the standard spending assessment for a district council are set out in paragraphs 3.33 to 3.36 and 3.48 to 3.58 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) as amended by paragraph 9 of the Revenue Support Grant Distribution (Amendment) Report (England). Copies of these documents are available in the Library.

Venezuelan Environment Minister

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he held an official meeting with Snr. Enrique C. Finol, Minister for the Environment for Venezuela, during his recent visit to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: A meeting was planned, but did not take place owing to a change in the Venezuelan Minister's programme.

Commonhold Legislation

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is his intention to include a right to buy the freehold for existing long leaseholders in the forthcoming commonhold legislation.

Mr. Yeo: We hope to make a statement on commonhold very shortly.

Housing, Tower Hamlets

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average rent of local authority homes in the London borough of Tower Hamlets in 1978 and in each subsequent year.

Sir George Young: Information on average weekly unrebated rents in April of each year is published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Housing Rents Statistics" for those authorities which respond to their annual survey. Copies of this publication for 1978 to 1990 are in the Library.

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes were started and completed in the London borough of Tower Hamlets in each year since 1974; and how many of these were local authority or housing association homes for rent.

Sir George Young: The London borough of Tower Hamlets has not sent the Department any statistical returns about housebuilding in the area since 1984. The available information as reported by the borough for 1980 onwards is shown in tables 1.1 to 1.5 of "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas 1980 to 1989". Tables 3.1 to 3.6 show housebuilding in Tower Hamlets by the Greater London council. Figures for 1974 to 1979 are shown in tables 5 and 7 of the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics: England and Wales": volume numbers 33, 37, 41, 45, 49 and 53, respectively. No completions have been reported of dwellings built specifically for sale by local authority or housing associations in Tower Hamlets.

Copies of the above publications are in the Library.

Planning Procedures

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken to ensure that planning inspectors with interests in property development and building firms do not hear appeals concerning major development proposals.

Mr. Yeo: Inspectors are not allocated cases where it is clear that they have a personal involvement or interest that might bring into question their impartiality. If an inspector is allocated a case where he has a personal interest that could conflict with his official duty, he is required to inform the Department. Another inspector will then be appointed in his place.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what register of interests exists for planning inspectors.

Mr. Yeo: The Department does not keep a register of inspectors' interests. It does however, maintain a list of areas in which inspectors will not be allocated work. This list normally includes the local authority area in which an inspector lives, or has been recently employed, and any other area where he has interests that could conflict with his official duties.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 20 December, Official Report, columns 273-74.

Mr. Heseltine: The following surveys carried out by my Department since 20 December 1990, include questions to individuals about their opinions:

Survey of Single Homelessness.
Survey of Housing Association Tenants.
Study of Under-Occupation in the Social Rented Sector.
Evaluation of the Impact of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987.
Study of Conversions of Houses into Flats in London.
Evaluating the Impact of Block Action.
Appraisal of assisted Agency Services.

Polish Economic Adviser

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he held an official meeting with Dr. Tomasz Zylicz, economics adviser to the Polish Minister for the Environment during his recent visit to London.

Mr. Trippier: No.

United Nations Environment Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he had an official meeting with Dr. Yusuf Ahmad of the United Nations environment programme executive directorate during his recent visit to London.

Mr. Trippier: Dr. Ahmad is a frequent visitor to the Department. My officials keep in touch with him on a number of international environmental issues on which he has much valued expertise.

International Biotechnology Workshop

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the international biotechnology workshop held at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre on 17-19 June.

Mr. Baldry: Further to my reply of 14 May to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell), the workshop was mounted under the auspices of the United Conference on Environment and Development—UNCED—and attended by some 50 senior international experts from about 30 countries. My Department contributed $80,000—£44,700—towards its cost.

Under the chairmanship of Dr. Nay Htun of the UNCED secretariat, the workshop considered a wide range of factors affecting the assessment and management of risks in biotechnology. The expert advice given will form the basis of proposals to be presented to the UNCED preparatory committee at its third session in Geneva next month.

The encouraging progress made at the workshop augurs well for the consideration of the environmentally sound management of biotechnology at the UNCED "Earth summit," to be held in Brazil in 1992. The United Kingdom will continue to work hard to prepare the ground for the agreement of a set of principles for risk assessment and management as a basis for the development of international guidelines on biotechnology safety.

Thorne Moor

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Thorne moor has been designated under the Ramsar convention.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 5 July 1991]: No. The former Nature Conservancy Council identified Thorne—and Hatfield—moor as a potential Ramsar site but the Government have not received any formal recommendations from English Nature.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he is considering for the storage of compressed carbon dioxide waste gases from coal gasification in depleted gas fields, as part of the programme for reducing atmospheric carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Energy's Chief Scientist's Group at the Energy Technology Support Unit is evaluating, in collaboration with industry, a number of options for the recovery of carbon dioxide from fossil fuel combustion and, inter alia, its disposal in disused natural gas fields. My Department is also seeking collaboration, under International Energy Agency auspices, with up to 14 other countries in an assessment of the feasibility of removing, utilising, transporting and disposing of carbon dioxide produced in fossil fuel power generation.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table of the total grants given by each local authority social services department in England to voluntary organisations for the last year for which the information is available.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 5 July 1991]: I have been asked to reply.

The latest year for which information is available is 1988-89. The information is given in the table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Government of the People's Republic of China with regard to the detention of the Right Reverend Joseph Fan Zhongliang.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have made no specific representations about the detention of Bishop Fan Zhongliang.

Conventional Forces in Europe

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in clarifying technical disputes regarding the CFE treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At an extraordinary conference of the CFE signatories in Vienna on 14 June, the Soviet Union made a statement regarding the treatment of equipment in coastal defence, naval infantry and strategic rocket force units. The extraordinary conference concluded that a satisfactory basis existed for proceeding toward ratification and implementation of the CFE treaty. The agreement reached will ensure that the Soviet Union will in practice comply with the limits, including zonal and active unit sublimits, established by the treaty.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 71.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No further public opinion surveys have been carried out by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office since my answer of 17 December 1990.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 24, if he will list the commencement date and duration of the publicity campaign to which he refers.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The publicity campaign aimed at British travellers abroad is a continuous one.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 24.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No such companies are employed or involved in these campaigns.

Iraq

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his most recent assessment of the dangers faced by the refugee Shias in southern Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are very disturbed by recent United Nations evidence of renewed Iraqi action against those Iraqi Shia who have taken refuge in the marsh area of southern Iraq. We have made our concerns known to the head of the Iraqi interests section in London and to the Iraqi permanent representative at the United Nations and have urged the Iraqis to allow humanitarian relief into the area quickly.

CIVIL SERVICE

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what powers executive agencies have to change their financial regime without first amending their framework document.

Mr. Renton: Agency chief executives keep their financial and other management regimes under review, with the aim of developing the framework best suited to their business needs. Significant changes in an agency's financial regime would require the agreement of the responsible Minister and the Treasury. In many cases, there will be sufficient flexibility in the framework document to allow for changes, so no further amendment is required. But where such changes are not covered the framework document will need to be revised.

TRANSPORT

London Underground

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the agreed expenditure for investment on the Circle line of London Underground over the next three years; and whether he has any plans to increase it.

Mr. Freeman: The Government do not set levels of investment for individual Underground lines. However, London Underground is in the process of refurbishing the entire fleet of Circle line trains. It is also looking at ways of improving the line's service reliability by combining its running with that of the Hammersmith and City line.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is having with the Health and Safety Executive in connection with each of the short and long-term recommendations listed in sections 7 and 8 of the May 1991 independent report by consulting engineers on the gantry accident of 4 September 1990 on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Chope: The recommendations are under discussion within the Department. The Health and Safety Executive will be consulted before final decisions are reached.

A6 Chapel Bypass

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the final price paid to the construction company involved in the A6 Chapel bypass as compared to the original contract price.

Mr. Chope: The original tender sum for the contract was £17·031 million. The total contractor's account was settled at £43·703 million.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton of 3 July, on the M11 link road, if he will list those standards established in the case of the M40, referred to by the hon. Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) in the debate on the New Roads and Street Works Bill in Standing Committee E on 14 March, Official Report, column 25, which can be applied to urban roads such as the M11 link road.

Mr. Chope: As is made clear in the answer to which the hon. Member refers, the measures taken to mitigate any evironmental impact of a new road depend on the individual nature of each project.

Maidstone Bypass

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to let a contract for the widening of the M20 Maidstone bypass; and what completion date will be specified.

Mr. Chope: The contract for the widening of the Maidstone bypass section of the M20 between junctions 5 and 8 was let on 4 July to Balfour Beatty Ltd. Work will begin before the end of July for completion by the spring of 1993.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, columns 59-60.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department regularly commissions surveys. A list of all surveys is maintained but it is not possible to identify easily from this list those surveys which have included questions of opinion. My hon. Friend's answer of 20 December 1990 referred to 370 surveys of all types reported in the years 1985 to 1989. A further 101 surveys were reported in 1990 and I am sending a list of these to the hon. Member.

British Rail (Safety)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to change British Rail's quality of service objectives to take account of the case for manning of rail stations in London by British Rail staff during the hours that such stations are timetabled to receive trains, and the provision at all stations of security cameras and emergency telephones.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 1 July 1991]: The staffing of stations is a matter for the BR board.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many assaults have taken place at unmanned British Rail stations in the past five years, and how many such stations had no security cameras and no emergency telephones.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 1 July 1991]: In 1989 and 1990 four assaults, of which one was serious, occurred at unmanned stations in the Greater London area. Figures for previous years and other areas are not readily available.

ENERGY

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many blocks of the United Kingdom continental shelf have been licensed for oil and gas exploration within the past 10 years despite sustained objections from the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Moynihan: The Nature Conservancy Council has registered concerns about a number of blocks offered for oil and gas licensing in the past 10 years. These concerns have been met by applying conditions and restrictions to activity under the licences or by not offering the relevant blocks. In this period, the Nature Conservancy Council has objected to the offer for licensing of six blocks or pairs of blocks. Three of these were offered in the 10th round, but not subsequently licensed; three were licensed in the 12th round of offshore licensing.

Radioactive Waste (Contamination)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether radioactive wastes contaminated with plutonium arising from the reprocessing of foreign spent fuel at (a) Sellafield and (b) Dounreay are covered by existing nuclear safeguards agreements.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All civil nuclear material is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom-Euratom-International Atomic Energy Authority safeguards agreement. The UK-Euratom-IAEA safeguards agreement provides, however, that safeguards shall be terminated when the material has been diluted to the point at which it is practicably irrecoverable.

Nuclear Electric

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy for what reason he prevented Nuclear Electric from launching a publicity and advertising campaign in July.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The decision to postpone a proposed advertising campaign was taken by Nuclear Electric plc.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when he last discussed directors' pay with Nuclear Electric;

(2) whether it is his policy that the pay of the directors of Nuclear Electric should be comparable with that of directors of the privatised electricity companies;

(3) what criteria he uses when determining the pay of the directors of Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Wakeham: I last discussed pay with members of the board of Nuclear Electric on 4 June 1991. Our approach in respect of all publicly owned companies is to pay salaries sufficient to recruit, retain and motivate the manpower the company needs.

Electricity Privatisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions paper for the printing of share certificates for the flotation at the electricity distribution companies was returned to the paper suppliers; whether any financial loss occurred to the Department as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: None. All the paper ordered for the printing of interim share certificates required in the regional electricity companies share offers was either used, returned to the supplier at no cost, or sold to a third party without loss.

EC Energy Ministers

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet his opposite numbers in other European Community countries; and what will be discussed.

Mr. Wakeham: I expect to meet my opposite numbers at the next Energy Council, on 29 October, when we will discuss a number of energy-related subjects.

I also hope to have separate meetings later this year with the German Minister for Economic Affairs, the Dutch Minister for Economic Affairs and the Portuguese Minister for Industry and Energy. In each case, European energy matters will form the basis for discussion.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 39.

Mr. Wakeham: The only advertising agency currently employed in any of the campaigns listed in my earlier answer is Laing Henry for the United Kingdom offshore supplies industry. My Department does not usually retain companies in a purely promotional or public relations role.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the cost, and the benefits, of his Department's exhibit on renewable energy resources at the recent exhibition on the environment, wildlife and conservation at Olympia.

Mr. Moynihan: The total cost of the Department of Energy's participation in this exhibition is expected to be £24,000. This event forms part of the programme for promoting renewable energy, including the raising of public awareness and the involvement of industry in the development and deployment of renewable energy technologies. An analysis of inquiries will be carried out to assess the effectiveness of the material provided.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 13.

Mr. Wakeham: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 39, if he will list the commencement date and duration of each publicity campaign.

Mr. Wakeham: The energy efficiency, offshore supplies industry and renewable energy campaigns are ongoing, and have been running for a number of years. The joint campaign with the Department of the Environment is expected to commence in the autumn of 1991 and continue until 1993-94.

Fourth Landward Licensing Round

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the response to the fourth landward licensing round.

Mr. Moynihan: The fourth landward licensing round which closed at noon on 20 June attracted 35 applications for exploration licences from 39 companies or groups of companies. I will now be considering all the applications on their merits. The new licences resulting from this round, which I hope to announce towards the end of the summer, should help to maintain the momentum of exploration onshore in Britain.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the public opinion surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of, the Lord Chancellor's Department or the Law Officers since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 1, giving the date and purpose of each survey.

The Attorney-General: No national public opinion survey has been conducted by, for or on behalf of the Lord Chancellor's Department or any of the Departments for which I am responsible since 17 December 1990. No records are held centrally of any local surveys that may have been conducted by area staff of the Crown prosecution service, and such information could be acquired only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Bank and Building Society Lending

Mr. Lawson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the annualised percentage growth of bank and building society lending was, seasonally adjusted, over the six months to (a) May 1991 and (b) June 1991.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For the six months to the end of May 1991 the banks' and building societies' lending to the M4 private sector annualised growth rate was 7·1 per cent. (seasonally adjusted).

The June 1991 figure is not available yet. It will be given in line 23 of table A of the Bank of England's monetary statistics notice, due for publicaton on 29 July 1991.

NUCPS (Pay Dispute)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his reasons for refusing to refer the pay dispute with the National Union of Civil and Public Servants to the Civil Service Arbitration tribunal; and if he will now reconsider that decision.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Under the terms of the long-term pay agreement with the NUCPS, arbitration is an option only if both parties agree. Arbritration was rejected because pay should reflect what is needed to recruit, retain and motivate staff within what can be afforded. The offer took these factors into account and is within the parameters of the pay agreement.

The NUCPS has now accepted the offer.

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to meet building society representatives to discuss the Government response to the Woolwich judicial review result.

Mr. Maples: I have no plans to do so. The Building Societies Association has not asked for such a meeting.

Obscene Publications

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many imported publications deemed to be obscene have been seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in the past five years; how many persons have been prosecuted for this trade; and what punishments were imposed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: In the five years 1986 to 1991 a total of 157,689 publications deemed to be indecent or obscene were seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. 37[illegible] persons were prosecuted leading to a total of 36 years 9[illegible] months imprisonment (including 18 years 1 month suspended sentences), seven years probation and fines and costs totalling £183,171.

Public Servants' Pensions

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the Government's policy of abating the pensions of public servants who are re-employed in the public service after retirement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government have completed their review of the current abatement policy.

My hon. Friend the then Economic Secretary announced on 21 December 1989 at col 370 that the pay or pension of retired public servants would no longer be subject to abatement if they were re-employed in a different public service after retirement. This change did not extend to those who retire early from one public service and are subsequently re-employed in another. They continue to be subject to abatement until they reach the normal retirement age in the public service from which they first retired.

The Government have now given further consideration to the abatement arrangements for those who are re-employed in the same public service from which they draw pension. Here, re-employment is a continuation of the employment from which the pension derives and we have concluded that a public service pension should not normally be payable where the employee has not genuinely retired from that public service. Circumstances may occur in the future in a particular public service for which a relaxation of abatement might be appropriate but no such case has been made so, for the present, we do not consider that any significant change is warranted in the current policy or its application. Abatement will generally continue to apply for those who are re-employed in the same public service from which they draw pension. There will, however, be some minor changes to remove anomalies which will ease the effect of abatement in some cases and will simplify administration.

Civil Service Employees

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the numbers, locations and departments of all civil servants employed in Gwent and Glamorgan.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 9 July 1991]: At 1 April 1991 the number of non-industrial civil servants employed in Gwent and Glamorgan was 22,165. Analyses by location and by department are given in tables 1 and 2 respectively. No figures are held centrally of the number of industrial civil servants employed in Gwent and Glamorgan.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Environmental Aid Projects

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria his Department's Overseas Development Administration uses to judge appropriate time horizons when considering the funding of environmental aid projects.

Mrs. Chalker: Consistent with the principles of sustainable development, we aim to take a long term view of every environmental impact of projects we finance, and pay special attention to any possible irreversible effects. No generally agreed criteria exist for judging appropriate specific time horizons and qualitative judgments are often needed especially where it is not possible fully to quantify environmental costs and benefits. We have financed work by the Overseas Development Institute, published last month as a book "Values for the Environment: A Guide to Economic Appraisal" by J. T. Winpenny, which will provide guidance on these issues to ODA economists and others. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Iraq

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the sums committed by Her Majesty's Government in humanitarian assistance to Iraq (a) for relief operations for refugees and (b) in total.

Mrs. Chalker: Since 4 April 1991, the Government have committed £61·5 million for Iraqi refugees. The Government also committed £18·37 million during 1990-91 for humanitarian assistance to refugees in the Gulf crisis area.

Malawi

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation of human rights in Malawi.

Mrs. Chalker: Observance of human rights in Malawi is showing welcome improvement. A total of 88 detainees have been released so far this year. The Malawi Government have told us that all remaining cases of detention without trial are under review. We seek an end to detention without trial in Malawi as elsewhere.

World Bank Report

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make it his policy to assist in the widespread distribution in the United Kingdom of the forthcoming annual world development report of the World Bank on environmental and development matters.

Mrs. Chalker: The 1991 World development report, "The Challenge of Development", was published by the World Bank on 8 July. I endorse its main thesis that successful development requires the public and private sectors each to play an appropriate role, and to do so effectively. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

The 1992 report will deal with development and the environment and will be published next April.

World development reports deserve to be widely distributed and the World Bank already has machinery in place to achieve this.

Contraceptive and Infant Health Care Advice

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance in regard to contraceptive advice and infant health care is made available by Her Majesty's Government to nations covered by the Lomé convention in the Pacific, Caribbean and Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: A specific focus on population and demography is included for the first time in the fourth Lomé convention signed in December 1989, although under earlier conventions the EC financed a number of projects in African, Caribbean and Pacific countries in the health sector. The Commission is now preparing projects reflecting the new focus in co-operation with Governments of African, Caribbean and Pacific countries.

Iraq

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are being made by the United Kingdom Government either individually or in conjunction with the international community to meet the humanitarian requirements of the Shi'ite population in southern Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The relief programmes of the United Nations and the Red Cross and Red Crescent provide humanitarian assistance to displaced people throughout Iraq. Britain has so far contributed US$16 million to the UN appeal launched in May and £2·5 million to the International Committee of the Red Cross. A UN mission is currently in Iraq to assess the situation particularly in the southern part of the country. We shall give its report our full consideration.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export of Goods Order

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the amendments made to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989; and if he has any plans to make any further amendments.

Mr. Sainsbury: Seven amendment orders to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1989 have been made:

Amendment No. 1 came into force 14 February 1990
Amendment No. 2 came into force 30 April 1990
Amendment No. 3 came into force 15 April 1990
Amendment No. 4 came into force 11 August 1990
Amendment No. 5 came into force 31 August 1990
Amendment No. 6 came into force 21 December 1990
Amendment No. 7 came into force 10 July 1991

It is planned to introduce a consolidated order incorporating these amendments later this year. Additional amendments to export controls reflecting agreement reached in various international regimes of which the United Kingdom is a member are anticipated.

Insurance Selling

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he intends to take to ensure that the coverage of the Association of British Insurance code of practice guidelines for general insurance selling are (a) complete and (b) enforced and whether he has any plans to refer this matter to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Mr. Redwood: All Association of British Insurance members agree to adhere to the provisions of the code. Its operation is overseen by an independent monitoring committee on which my Department is represented. I believe that the code is working satisfactorily, but the monitoring committee will be undertaking a full review next year. Any evidence to the contrary should be sent to the monitoring committee. I have no plans to refer the code to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Maintenance Contracts

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about alleged unfair terms in maintenance contracts for office and industrial equipment, excluding photocopier leasing agreements.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has received three complaints over the last three months alleging unfair terms in maintenance contracts for office equipment other than photocopiers. All three complaints have been about maintenance and leasing agreements for facsimile equipment.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 18 March 1991, Official Report, columns 23-24. That statement applies equally to all maintenance contracts for office and industrial equipment.

Fraud

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to bring forward proposals to place a duty on auditors to report fraud, or suspicion of fraud.

Mr. Redwood: As the Government made clear in their response to the report of the Trade and Industry Select Committee on company investigations, we do not believe that a statutory duty should be imposed on auditors to report fraud, or suspicions of fraud, to the authorities. We believe that the action to be taken by auditors in respect of fraud is best left to professional guidance and we welcome the profession's initiative in publishing last year the auditing guideline on the auditor's responsibilities in respect of fraud, other irregularities and errors, which all auditors are expected to follow.

Export Licences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether export licences are required for the sale by British companies of (a) technology, (b) engineering design and (c) building design blueprints or plans, where the development of such blueprints or plans involves military equipment or premises.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 July 1991]: In 1989 the export controls covering military equipment to certain countries were extended to include all products involving the combination and construction of metallic or non-metallic materials specially designed to provide ballistic protection for military systems. Similarly, all technology engineering design and building design blueprints or plans relating to these products now require a licence.

Friendly Societies

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he proposes to initiate legislation for the reform of friendly societies.

Mr. Maples: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, South (Mr. Morris) on 3 June 1991, Official Report, column 23.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Services

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of fire engines and average populations served by each fire brigade station in London for each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The number of front-line pumping appliances based at each fire station in the London fire brigade for each year from 1979 to 1991 is shown in the table. Information about the population served by each fire station in the London fire brigade is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Junior Crime Prevention Panels

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the presentation of his awards to the west midlands junior crime prevention panels.

Mr. John Patten: Although my right hon. Friend has made no awards of prizes to west midlands junior crime prevention panels, I acknowledged and thanked those involved for the valuable work which they undertake during my address to the crime prevention conference "A Matter of Youth" held at Edgbaston on 18 October 1990. Home Office grants totalling £6,155 have been made under the safer cities programme to support and promote the work of junior crime prevention panels in the west midlands.

Refugees (Legal Advice)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given to the obligations in the international conventions on refugees that there should be no discrimination in access to legal advice and assistance in proposing the ending of green form legal advice and assistance to refugees.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In their review of asylum arrangements the Government have taken full account of the United Kingdom's international obligations. The planned change in eligibility for green form legal aid, which relates to all immigration matters, is compatible with these obligations. In this area the primary remedy lies in appeals to the immigration appellate authorities, for which free advice and representation is available from the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service. We have no plans to alter access to the High Court in these cases or eligibility for legal aid for litigation there.

Mr. Paul Cleeland

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for his Department's document on Paul Alexander Cleeland's trial to be further amended in respect of the comments of the preparer of the document so that it refers only to the summing-up of the trial judge.

Mr. John Patten: Following my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 1 May 1991 at column 178, a copy of the revised Home Office memorandum on Mr. Cleeland's conviction was placed in the Library. We are now considering whether there are grounds to justify the intervention of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary in the conviction of Mr. Cleeland. As part of the review of the case, we will consider whether any further amendments to the Home Office memorandum on Mr. Cleeland's conviction are necessary.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 4.

Mr. John Patten: The Department has carried out four public opinion surveys since 17 December 1990:

—two surveys of attitudes to crime and crime prevention among adults, done before and after Crime Prevention Week in April 1991;

—two surveys about crime prevention, carried out in March and May 1991, as part of a series of surveys to test the effectiveness of crime prevention publicity.

Some questions on attitudes to punishment were also put to 12 to 19-year-olds in May 1991 in an omnibus survey.

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in which Mr. Charlie McGhee (MM2170) has been held in the six weeks up to 5 July; and if he will give reasons for transfer in each case.

Mrs. Rumbold: Charles McGhee—MM2170—who is a category A prisoner, was transferred on three occasions in the six weeks up to 5 July 1991. On 7 June, Mr. McGhee was transferred to Frankland prison from Full Sutton prison in the interests of maintaining good order and discipline. On 23 June, following an incident at Frankland prison, it became necessary to move a number of prisoners, including Mr. McGhee, who was transferred to Long Lartin. On subsequent review, it proved necessary to move him again, in the interests of good order and discipline, and on 28 June he was transferred to Wakefield prison.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those countries with which the United Kingdom has a prisoner transfer ratification agreement; how the parole systems in each country are affected by transfer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The following countries have joined the United Kingdom in ratifying the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons:

Austria
Belgium
Canada
Cyprus
Denmark
Finland
France
Greece
Italy
Luxembourg
Malta
Netherlands
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey
USA

A bilateral agreement has also been signed with the Government of Thailand.

We do not have comprehensive information about the parole systems in other countries. The necessary details are established when an application for transfer is received.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 4.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Home Office uses the following advertising agencies:

Collett Dickinson Pearce and Partners Limited—Crime Prevention

FCO Limited—Fire Prevention and Safety, Electoral Registration, Absent voting

Riley Advertising—Police Recruitment: Graduate/Ethnic, Police Special Constable Recruitment, Prison Service Recruitment

BMP DDB Needham Worldwide Limited—Passports

My Department does not use public relations companies. We do not currently use a promotional agency, although we did engage Clarke Hooper Consulting Limited for last April's Crime Prevention Week.

"Civil Protection Magazine" is produced by the Home Office and the Central Office of Information.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

SERC Projects

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the practice for the Science and Engineering Council in setting up a capital project with regard to estimating and recording the actual manpower used at the end of a project.

Mr. Alan Howarth: We have been informed by the SERC that under arrangements now in force for consideration of major capital projects, full account is taken of the estimated direct and indirect manpower costs involved. Detailed arrangements for subsequent monitoring during project construction also apply.

Education Resources

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply of 21 February, Official Report, columns 235-36, he will publish the same tables with deductions for capital expenditure from the appropriate heading.

Mr. Fallon: The figures published in my reply of 21 February already exclude capital expenditure. The potential schools budget is the general schools budget less expenditure on five items excepted from delegation: capital; government specific grants; home to school transport; school meals; and transitional exceptions.

National Curriculum

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he is taking to inquire into the activities and costs of educational institutes following the Government's decision that the language in the national curriculum report was not of an adequate standard to merit publication.

Mr. Eggar: No such inquiry is necessary. My right hon. and learned Friend has decided that the materials should not be published so that they would be used only for their intended purpose and not used in the classroom as teaching materials.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, what action he is taking to recover the full amount spent on the unpublished language in the national curriculum report from educational institutes and other bodies engaged in its preparation.

Mr. Eggar: Language in the curriculum is a three-year training programme for teachers, now entering its final phase. The cost of producing the training package used in the programme was about £120,000. The question of recovering costs does not arise.

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has held with Nottingham university concerning research contracts between his Department and the university following his decision in respect of the language in the national curriculum report.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no discussion with the university of Nottingham concerning research contracts.

Salaries

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on parity of salaries between clinical academic staff and their NHS counterparts.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, as the representatives of university employers, to settle the pay levels of clinical and other academic staff within the aggregate resources available. The Government take account of relative pay and price costs and other relevant factors in determining aggregate public funding for the universities.

Medical Education

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the British Medical Association on the impact on medical education of underfunding of universities; and how he has responded.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Two letters about university funding and other matters have been received recently from the medical academic staff committee of the BMA. In reply, we have made clear that it is for individual universities to determine the funding of medical schools within the aggregate resources at their disposal, including the planned increase in available public funding in 1991-92 of some 10 per cent. for the second year running.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December 1990, Official Report, column 41.

Mr. Eggar: Further policy evaluation projects of the kind described in my reply on this subject on 17 December, which we have commissioned from the relevant budget since then are:

Effective management in schools.
Employment and development of teachers after long INSET courses.
Follow-up of a survey service on bully/victim problems.
Family expenditure survey 1991/92 (DES contribution).

Haberdashers' Aske's CTC

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) in determining the percentage of his contribution towards any additional capital costs of establishing the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college, what account he will take of the Haberdashers' Company's agreement to underwrite extra sponsorship income for the college during the period in which the initial capital works will be completed;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 187, what percentage up to 80 per cent. he will agree to contribute towards any additional capital costs of establishing the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college;

(3) what additional capital costs, beyond those specified in paragraph 8(ii) of the funding agreement signed on 21 December 1990, are expected to be incurred in establishing the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college;

(4) over what period he anticipates that the initial capital works for establishing the Haberdashers' Aske's city technology college will be carried out.

Mr. Eggar: I am discussing possible design changes to proposed capital works with the sponsors. I am not yet in a position to confirm the extent of any changes, associated costs and their apportionment.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assistance is provided by his Department to British Nuclear Fuels plc in support of its educational programme for school governors.

Mr. Fallon: As part of our general programme of support for school governors, the Department and Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools participated last December in the annual seminar organised by British Nuclear Fuels plc for its employees who are governors.

Advertising

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, columns 43-44.

Mr. Eggar: The teacher recruitment campaign has been designed by Saatchi and Saatchi Advertising Limited.

No company has yet been selected to undertake the publicity campaign to provide parents with information about changes in the education system.

The services to business campaign, run as part of the Department's professional, industrial and commercial updating (PICKUP) programme, is managed by Quadrangle Communications Limited.

Voluntary Aided Schools

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools applied to become voluntary aided schools during each of the past four years; in how many cases were the applications supported by the local education authority; and how many of these applications were subsequently approved by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Fallon: The information on the number of independent schools which have applied to the Secretary of State since 1987 for voluntary-aided status is provided in the table.

Nuclear Physics, Daresbury

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the total manpower costs for nuclear physics at Daresbury for each year since 1974.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not held centrally by the Department. The hon. Member may wish to direct his question to the Science and Engineering Research Council.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the annual extra overhead costs to be borne by the remainder of Daresbury laboratory as a result of the ending of the NSF contributions to those overhead costs.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not held centrally by the Department. My hon. Friend may wish to direct his question to the Science and Engineering Research Council.

British School

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, if he will make additional provision for construction costs of the British school in Armenia in 1991-92.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Parliamentary approval for my Department to make final payments for the Armenian school project will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for the schools, research and miscellaneous services vote (class XI, vote 1). This will provide mainly for some minor remedial work to complete the contract liabilities. The expenditure will be offset by a saving elsewhere on the vote. Pending Parliament's approval, urgent expenditure will be met by a repayable advance of £7,000 from the contingencies fund.

National Curriculum

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, when he intends to publish for consultation the draft order with attainment targets and programmes of study for modern foreign languages in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today published for consultation a draft order with an associated document setting out attainment targets and programmes of study for modern foreign languages in the national curriculum for pupils aged 11 to 16, as I am required to do by section 20(5) of the Education Reform Act 1988. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The draft order has been prepared following advice to me from the National Curriculum Council, in the light of its consultations on the proposals made by the former holder of my office and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. I am most grateful to the council for its advice.

I have accepted the council's recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study as a basis for further consultation. The National Curriculum Council has recommended a reduction in the total number of statements of attainment from 144 to 102. I have accepted this change and believe that it will be helpful in reducing the assessment load on teachers. I have however, made a few minor changes of wording, particularly to the non-statutory examples.

The draft order for modern foreign languages sets out a range of essential language competences; concentrates on the ability of pupils to use foreign languages effectively for communication; highlights the importance of cultural awareness as an integral part of language learning and ensures that all pupils will receive a stimulating and worthwhile challenge in order to raise standards and stretch even the most able learners at the upper levels of attainment.

The period for consultation on the draft order will end on 4 October 1991. I intend to make the final order in November 1991 in good time for schools to begin teaching national curriculum modern foreign languages to pupils aged 11 from the following autumn.

I have also accepted the national curriculum council's recommendation that the format of the order made under section 3(2) (b) of the Education Reform Act be amended from two schedules to a single list of specified languages. I intend to make a new section 3 order at the same time as the final order in November 1991.

Truancy

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take to reduce truancy rates in schools.

Mr. Fallon [pursuant to the reply, 15 April 1991, columns 51-52]: My right hon. and learned Friend and his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have today laid before Parliament regulations on pupil registration and the publication of information about rates of unauthorised absence. These require that from the beginning of the next school year, schools distinguish in their attendance registers between authorised and unauthorised absences of pupils of compulsory school age and from August 1992 maintained schools' prospectuses and annual reports include specified information on rates of unauthorised absence.

These regulations have been laid after a two-month consultation period in which widespread support was expressed for our proposed action on school attendance. They will stimulate all schools to give a high priority to attendance. Schools in turn should be able to look to parents to shoulder their responsibilities to secure their children's attendance at school.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environment Exhibition, Olympia

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost and the benefit of his Ministry's exhibit at the recent exhibition on environment, wildlife and conservation at Olympia; and what special literature was produced for the event.

Mr. Curry: The cost of the Department's exhibit at the Sunday Times exhibition on environment, wildlife and conservation at Olympia, was £100,000 of which £27,000 was for site rental. The exhibit explains how MAFF, in association with other Government Departments and agencies, works to achieve a balance in the use of the countryside and surrounding rivers and seas. A brochure entitled "Balance in the Countryside" is being used to support the exhibit.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 72.

Mr. Curry: Current publicity campaigns are based on the opinion surveys commissioned by the Department prior to 17 December 1990. No further surveys have been undertaken since that date.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been spent on the United Kingdom set-aside scheme for each year since 1989-90; what are his estimates for 1992-93 and 1993-94; and what account in these estimates has been taken of the agreements reached at the Agriculture Council meeting in May.

Mr. Curry: The table shows the actual amounts paid to United Kingdom participants in the 1989-90 and 1990-91 financial years and the estimates of payments to be made in the period 1991-92 to 1993-94. The estimates do not take account of the agreement reached at the Agriculture Council meeting in May.

Financial years	£ million
1989-90	[1] 9·84
1990-91	[1] 19·11
1991-92	[2] 27·92
1992-93	[2] 49·37
1993-94	[2] 48·91

[1] Actual.
[2] Estimated.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the results of inspections his Ministry has carried out on the set-aside scheme including (a) the number of farms visited and (b) the percentage visited of the total in set-aside; and how many breaches of regulation have been identified, for each year of the scheme.

Mr. Curry: The Community set-aside rules require member states to inspect a minimum of 5 per cent. of holdings on which land is being set aside under the scheme. It is not departmental policy to indicate the expected or achieved levels of inspection in the interests of proper enforcement. In the United Kingdom, in the first year of the scheme, significant irregularities were found on 2 per cent. of the holdings inspected.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the five-year set-aside scheme in 1991-92; and whether he will allow the use of set-aside land to grow non-food crops.

Mr. Gummer: The five-year set-aside scheme will be open to new applications from 1 August 1991. The only changes to the rules of the existing scheme will be to provide for the partial refund of cereals coresponsibility levy paid between 31 July 1991 and 30 June 1992 to set-aside participants. The refund is expected (subject to detailed Commission rules) to amount to £2·68 per tonne. Application forms and explanatory booklets will be available from local divisional offices at the end of this month. These forms must be returned by 30 September 1991.

I have consulted interested bodies on the EC regulations permitting member states to permit the growing of cereals for non-food uses on set-aside land. In the light of that consultation and the report to the House of Lords by the Select Committee on European Communities (Sub-Committee D) on non-food uses of agricultural products I have concluded that we should not introduce such a scheme in the United Kingdom. I will, however, continue to keep the possibility under review.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the uptake of the set-aside scheme, including the number of farms and the area of land set aside in hectares in England in 1990 and 1991;

(2) if he will list the numbers of farms, the numbers of hectares and the average area per farm in hectares which are in the set-aside scheme in each county in 1991;

(3) what amount of land in (a) hectares and (b) percentage terms in set-aside was used for different land use options in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the press release dated 17 December 1990, which is available in the Library of the House.

Cereals

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the hectareage of land in the United Kingdom under cereals in 1991.

Mr. Curry: The preliminary estimate of the area sown to cereals in the United Kingdom for the 1991 harvest is 3·6 million hectares.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 75.

Mr. Curry: The Department has employed no advertising, promotional or public relations companies in connection with these campaigns.

Design and production of the touring exhibition was carried out under contract by Interactive Learning Productions; and design work on the revision of food publications is being carried out under contract by Trickett and Webb Ltd.

Residues (Meat)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce further controls on residues of veterinary medicines in meat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am issuing a consultation document today on our proposals and I intend to introduce regulations under the Food Safety Act which will significantly strengthen existing controls on the presence of veterinary medicines in meat and meat products. There has been concern that the mis-use of veterinary medicines can pose a threat to the health of consumers through residues passing into the food chain.

The new measures will contain the following key elements:

to make it an offence to submit an animal for slaughter containing residues in excess of prescribed maximum limits;

to make it an offence to sell meat or meat products with excess residues;

to make it an offence to fail to observe the withdrawal period stipulated in the literature associated with licensed veterinary medicinal products; to enable carcases found to contain excess residues to be immediately condemned as unfit for human or animal consumption; to enable animals found to contain illegal beta-agonists or other unlicensed veterinary medicinal products to be compulsorily slaughtered other than for human or animal consumption.

The consultation document has been issued to interested parties and copies have also been placed in the Library of the House. Consultation with the European Commission will also be necessary. I expect to be able to lay the final regulation before the House in October.

The British agricultural industry has a fine reputation for the safe use of veterinary medicines. These measures will protect that reputation and I hope that other countries in the European Community will be prepared to take and enforce similar measures.

Voluntary Organisations

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all those voluntary organisations which are receiving grant aid from his Ministry in 1991-92 and his estimates for 1992-93; and if he will list the amounts which each organisation is to receive.

Mr. Gummer: The following voluntary organisations will benefit from grants made by my Department in 1991-92. Estimates for 1992-93 are also given.

Organisation	Grant for 1991-92 £	Estimated grant for 1992-93 £

[1] These grants are under review.
[2] £6,500 of this is a subscription.

Blue Ear Pig Disease

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which counties restrictions on pigs are in force due to blue ear disease; which counties were included in his chief veterinary officer's notification of the disease to the EC under Commission decision 91/237/EEC dated 1 July 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 24 June at column 383 and the information placed in the Library of the House accordingly.

WALES

Hazardous Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the amounts of hazardous waste imported into Great Britain for incineration through Welsh ports from the Irish Republic in each year since October 1988.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information is as follows.

	Waste (tonnes)
1 October 1988 to 31 March 1989	43·0
1 April 1989 to 31 March 1990	316·4
1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991	501·2

School Meals

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the percentage of school meals received by pupils per local education authority in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools for each of the years since 1979.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information, as at September of each year, is given in the table.

School Sport

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the state of sport in schools.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend is jointly, with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, considering the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee report on sport in schools. They are also considering the final report of the physical education working group set up to advise on a national curriculum for PE in schools.

As part of the Government's current review of its policies towards sport and active recreation we are also looking at ways in which children of school age can be encouraged to participate in sport both during and outside school hours, including through the further promotion of links between schools and local sports clubs.

Housing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what new measures he proposes to tackle the housing needs of (a) the homeless, (b) young families, (c) vulnerable single people and (d) those with special needs.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I have today announced a personal initiative for single or other homeless people with special or severe difficulty. Local authorities have been invited to submit proposals for a pilot scheme to develop new measures of support and make the best use of existing resources, in partnership with other relevant local statutory and non-statutory bodies. Resources of up to £800,000 are to be allocated over a period of three years to fund the scheme.

Local authorities have also been invited to bid against a capital reserve of £2·88 million and revenue support for local voluntary bodies of £150,000 for homelessness projects. The reserve is designed to complement authorities' own efforts in dealing with cases of homelessness, within the context of the approach to partnership with housing associations and voluntary bodies which is developing strongly in Wales.

These measures are additional to plans in hand with Housing for Wales to increase the total housing association stock by over one third by 1993-94, so directly benefiting a range of groups including families and those in special need.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) council, (b) private and (c) housing association houses have been completed in each of the last 10 years in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the numbers of farms, the numbers of hectares and the average area per farm in hectares which are in the set-aside scheme in each county in 1991;

(2) what was the uptake of the set-aside scheme in (a) the number of farms and (b) the area of land set aside in hectares for 1990 and 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: Fifty-three farms had entered the scheme by the end of the 1990-91 scheme year. Details are given in the table.

Cardiff Barrage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has received from the Countryside Council for Wales concerning the proposed Cardiff barrage; and if he proposes to accept its advice.

Mr. David Hunt: My officials have begun discussions with officers of the Countryside Council about issues arising out of the proposed Cardiff barrage. I shall take account of recommendations emerging from these discussions in finalising my proposals.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, columns 35-36.

Mr. David Hunt: Advertising and promotions companies employed by or on behalf of the Welsh Office on the campaigns detailed in the reply I gave on 1 July 1991 are:

McCann Erickson Payne Golley—Enterprise Wales
Dragon Advertising—Road Safety

The Department has not yet appointed any advertising, promotions or public relations contractor to undertake drugs and alcohol misuse work this financial year.

Tai Cymru

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the real terms funding for Tai Cymru in each of the last three years.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the approved gross development programme for Housing for Wales, which includes receipts. The initial allocations, which exclude resources transferred from local authorities, at 1991-92 prices are as follows:

	£ million
1989-90	83·017
1990-91	109·336
1991-92	117·414

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the salaries of the board members of Tai Cymru.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The remuneration of the board members of Housing for Wales, effective from 1 April 1991, is as follows:

Chairman	26,750
Deputy Chairman	8,280
Members	3,625

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names of the chairpersons of training and enterprise councils he has appointed in Wales, stating the salaries payable to them and, for each of them, the experience, qualifications and interests which qualified them for appointment.

Mr. David Hunt: Training and enterprise council boards are responsible for the appointment of their chair persons. To be eligible a chair person must be a chief executive of a company; a top operational manager at local level of a major company; or the senior partner in a professional partnership. The appointment is unpaid. The Welsh TEC chairmen are as follows:

Mid Glamorgan
Mr. John W. Phillips (Managing Director, Reliance-Barker-Davies Ltd.).

West Wales
Mr. Robert C. Hastie (Chairman, Bernard Hastie and Company Ltd.).

North East Wales
Mr. John Troth (Managing Director, Dennis Ruabon Ltd.).

South Glamorgan
Mr. Roger G. Helliwell (Group Director, William Cowlin and Son Ltd.).

North West Wales
Mr. Trefor Jones (Chief Executive, Pilkington Optronics Division).

Gwent
Mr. Geoff Canning (Works Manager, British Steel Tinplate).

Powys
Mr. David Margetts (Chairman, Elkay Electrical Manufacturing Company Ltd.).

Trawsfynydd Lake

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further studies he is carrying out on radioactivity in Trawsfynydd lake; and when he expects the results to be available.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The fisheries radiological inspectorate—FRI—of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food provides scientific advice to the Welsh Office which is responsible for radioactive waste disposal authorisations in Wales. The FRI operates a continuing programme of monitoring of radiation dose rates and measuring radioactivity in a variety of environmental materials in the environment of Lake Trawsfynydd. The results are published in the FRI's annual reports of monitoring of radioactivity in surface and coastal waters of the British isles and copies are available in the Library of the House.

An enhanced programme has been set up to obtain samples of sediment cores, in which radioactivity can be measured in specific layers. The results of this additional work will be published in due course; meanwhile, the results so far are comparable where appropriate with the results of the regular monitoring programme.

Oral Surgery

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the date and venue of each of his visits to oral surgery departments in hospitals in Wales since his appointment.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: My right hon. Friend has not made any specific visits to oral surgery departments in hospitals in Wales, but in my capacity as Minister of health in Wales, I visited the dental hospital at the University hospital of Wales on 15 March 1991.

Disability Manifesto

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the recommendations of the "Disability Manifesto: An Agenda for the 1990s", a copy of which has been sent to him, which relate to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett [holding answer 3 July 1991]: In their responses to similar questions from the right hon. Gentleman, my right hon. and hon. Friends have set out the Government's key policies and programmes in relation to the groups whose needs are referred to in the disability manifesto. Most of these policies and programmes, including in particular the improvements to social security arrangements and employment opportunities, will benefit equally people with disabilities in Wales.

We have a complementary programme to meet the distinctive needs and circumstances of Wales, the aim of which is to enable people with disabilities to play the fullest possible part in the life of their communities.

We have placed particular emphasis on the development of services for people with physical or sensory disabilities in our guidance on the development of social care plans. In Wales these are being prepared jointly, under the leadership of social service authorities, by local health authorities and other agencies, working in close consultation with representatives of the users and carers. The first social care plans will be published in April 1992 and will be available to the public so they can see what services are available, how to gain access to them, and what proposals are being made for their development.

These developments in social care planning build on existing distinctive policies and initiatives in Wales which will continue. These include the all-Wales mental handicap and mental illness strategies under which we are providing £39 million in 1991-92 to promote new patterns of more local and accessible services. We are also continuing our initiative on the elderly under which we are providing £2·38 million in 1991-92 to promote innovation in service delivery which enables people to remain in comfort and dignity in their own homes and communities. Further to encourage the development of more flexible forms of community care for elderly people and those with physical or sensory disabilities, we have introduced in 1991-92 a new grant scheme. Under this almost £1·6 million is being made available, much of it for services provided by voluntary bodies.

On the housing front, local authorities are being encouraged, through their involvement in social care planning, to assess the current and future housing needs of disabled people within their areas. In most cases, it is expected that housing needs will be met by making repairs and adaptations to individuals' existing homes. The recent changes to the disabled facilities grants will ensure that the maximum assistance, up to the total cost of adaptations, will go to those in greatest need. In addition, Housing for Wales has a policy of devoting 10 per cent. of its programme to supported schemes for people with special needs. In the current year it is expected that this will lead to the provision of in excess of 330 new homes, many of which will be for people with learning or physical disabilities.

The Welsh Office is sponsoring once again this year the access award scheme, run by the Wales Council for the Disabled, to encourage good building design with the aim of ensuring that buildings are accessible to people with disabilities.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Visits

2. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister, when he will next pay an official visit to south London.

The Prime Minister: I am making plans for a series of visits to all parts of the country and very much hope to include south London among them.

Share Shops

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister which Departments have participated in the Government's review of high street share shops as a distribution method for privatisation issues and other equities.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is considering, in consultation with interested colleagues, proposals from the private sector for a retail share distribution network.

China (Visit)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he intends to raise the matters of global warming and climate change, and ozone layer depletion, when he meets members of the Chinese Government during his forthcoming visit to China.

The Prime Minister: Plans for my visit to China are still at an early stage of preparation. The Government are in regular contact with the Chinese authorities to discuss climate change, ozone layer depletion and other international environmental issues.

Environmental Conferences

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government were represented at the Ecoasia '91 conference held in Japan in early July.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the new policy proposals on the environment he made to the conference on global problems and solutions on 8 July.

The Prime Minister: Copies of my speech are available in the Library.

World Conservation Monitoring Centre

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what use is made by departments of Her Majesty's Government of the world conservation monitoring centre in Cambridge; and what funds are provided by Her Majesty's Government to support the centre.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to page 52 of the Environment White Paper (Cm. 1200), where attention is drawn to the Government's five-point plan for the conservation of biological diversity in developing countries. The first of the five points relates to a major study on the status of the world's biodiversity which is being carried out for the Overseas Development Administration by the world conservation monitoring centre. The centre is an independent charity established by leading agencies in the conservation movement including the International Union for the Conservation of Nature (IUCN) and the United Nations environment programme (UNEP), both of which are supported financially by Her Majesty's Government.

United Nations Bodies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what annual contributions have been made by the United Kingdom since 1979 to the man and biosphere interdisciplinary sciences and natural resource programme of the United Nations Education and Science Organisation; and what benefits have accrued to the United Kingdom from the contributions made.

The Prime Minister: Until the United Kingdom withdrew from the United Nations Education and Science Organisation (UNESCO), in December 1985 no separate contribution was made from aid funds to the man and biosphere (MAB) programme. An assessed contribution was made annually to the UNESCO programme of which MAB is an integral part.

Since our withdrawal from UNESCO research related to the MAB has been maintained through a grant from the Overseas Development Administration to the National Environment Research Council (NERC). The sums given over the past five years are as follows:

1986-87	89,185
1987-88	98,600
1988-89	98,700
1989-90	100,000
1990-91	100,000

Work on the MAB within NERC is undertaken by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology. The institute benefits from these contributions by being able to maintain its research capacity in areas overseas which might not qualify for funding from its other sources. This strengthens the United Kingdom institutional capacity to maintain a broad experience in environmental disciplines and increases our knowledge of the environmental problems affecting other countries, whose perspectives and priorities in addressing environmental issues may differ from those of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to propose to the United Nations that a new agency for the promotion and establishment of new and renewable energy sources be set up under the auspices of the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: The United Nations already has a committee on new and renewable sources of energy, which has achieved little of value. The question of future United Nations institutions in this area is likely to form part of the subject matter of the United Nations conference on environment and development to take place in Rio de Janeiro next year.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects Her Majesty's Government to publish the results of its monitoring of the implementation of carbon dioxide emission reduction policies; and if he will indicate the cost to date of such monitoring.

The Prime Minister: United Kingdom carbon dioxide emission figures are published annually in the Department of the Environment's "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics". The first set of measures to curb emissions was published last September in the Environment White Paper (Cm 1200). We will publish a report in the autumn on progress towards our carbon dioxide target.

It is not possible to estimate separately the cost of monitoring progress on carbon dioxide as monitoring forms part of a wider programme of work on the United Kingdom's response to the threat of climate change, involving a number of departments.

"Our Common Future"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when Her Majesty's Government intend to publish their review of progress in the implementation of the action points set out in the White Paper "Our Common Future" and what has been the total cost to date of the actions taken to implement the proposals and commitments.

The Prime Minister: The first full progress report on the Environment White Paper (Cm 1200) will be published later this year. The essence of the White Paper commitments is the integration of environmental concerns throughout Government policies. The cost of implementation is therefore reflected across a wide range of spending priorities and an all-inclusive figure for the costs of the action taken to date is not readily available. Among the more substantial expenditure committed is:

Water investment by the water companies of £28 billion from 1990 to 2000;

An extra £23·1 million grant-in-aid in 1991-92 for the National Rivers Authority;

£30·2 million representing a rise of 35 per cent. grant-in-aid to the Countryside Commission for 1991-92;

Increase of £4 million for research on renewable energy;

An extra £133 million credit approval for local authorities over the next three years to improve recycling and waste disposal.

Rain Forests

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to enhance biodiversity and the protection of the rain forests in south America, south-east Asia and Africa.

The Prime Minister: On biodiversity, our activities are summarised in "Biological Diversity and Developing Countries: Issues and Options", which was published last month and which is in the Library.

British bilateral aid contributions to forest projects in progress or under consideration as at early 1991 are as follows:

	Number of projects	Estimated aid programme costs (£ million)
South America	12	10·5
South East Asia[1]	9	9·4
Africa	74	28·2

[1] Indonesia, Malaysia, Thailand.

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to publish the consultation paper on his proposals for an environmental protection and enhancement agency, announced on 8 July.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 8 July 1991 at column 279 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe).

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 11 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

HEALTH

Chronic Sick and Disabled Units

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many young chronic sick and disabled units have closed in the past five years.

Mr. Dorrell: Our figures show the number of units recording patient activity, not the number of units closed.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of people cared for in young chronic sick and disabled units for each year since 1980.

Mr. Dorrell: The available information is given in the table. The figures from 1980 to 1986 refer to deaths and discharges from units for younger physically disabled and spinal injury units. The information for 1988-89 and 1989-90 is the estimated number of finished ward stays of patients in these units. The figures are not directly comparable.

Tower Hamlets

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of people employed in Tower Hamlets in (a) Tower Hamlets health authority, (b) Royal London hospital trust, (c) family practitioner service, (d) dental service and (e) other health-related occupations for each year since 1979.

Mr. Stephen Dorrell: The table provides the figures requested in Tower Hamlets authority from 1982, the earliest date available, to 1989, the latest available. Figures up to 1985 include family practitioner committee staff. It is not possible now to distinguish between family practitioner committee and district health authority figures for those years. On 1 April 1985 family practitioner committees became independent employing authorities. District health authority figures after that date, therefore, exclude FPC staff. Information in respect of the number of people employed by family practitioner committees since 1985 is not held centrally.

Information about the numbers employed by the Royal London hospital trust and other related occupations is not collected centrally.

Notes:

[1] Figures include Medical and Dental Locums and agency locums and Nursing and Midwifery agency staff, and Permanent paid Honorary staff.
Figures exclude Consultants and Senior Registrars in Non-Teaching District Health Authorities and Senior Registrars in Teaching District Health Authorities. These still have their contracts with the RHA.
On 1 April 1985 Family Practitioner Committees became independent employing authorities. Figures after that date therefore exclude FPC staff.

[2] Figures are independently rounded to the nearest whole-time equivalent.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of reported cases of theft and fraud in the Tower Hamlets health authority in each year since 1979 showing (a) the total number of cases reported, (b) the total number of prosecutions and (c) the total number of convictions.

Mr. Dorrell: The Tower Hamlets health authority was established on 1 April 1982 following the abolition of area health authorities and consequently 1982-83 is the first year for which information is available.

The annual statement of losses included with the authority's annual accounts, records the number of reported cases in the category of loss of cash, equipment and property in stores and in use arising from theft, fraud, arson, neglect of duty or gross carelessness as follows:

Year	Number of cases
1982-83	33
1983-84	40
1984-85	28
1985-86	51
1986-87	84
1987-88	45
1988-89	25
1989-90	33

Health authorities are required to report to the Department annually all instances of alleged fraud and Tower Hamlets health authority has made no reports of fraud since its inception.

Information on the numbers of theft cases reported to the police, and of any resultant prosecutions and convictions is not collected centrally by the Department.

Nurses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many enrolled nurses in the national health service have expressed interest in converting to state-registered nurse status; and how many conversion places from enrolled to state-registered nurse status have been offered for national health service staff;

(2) what steps he has taken to create and co-ordinate a national stratagem for enrolled nurse conversion courses; and what funding is available for the provision of enrolled nurse conversion courses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for regional health authorities, in consultation with employers, to plan for enrolled nurse conversion as part of their responsibility for identifying the level of demand for qualified nurses and for allocating appropriate budgets.

In addition, plans submitted to the Department for the implementation of Project 2000 nurse training are expected to contain firm proposals to increase the number of conversion places. Central funding has been made available to facilitate this.

The number of conversion courses approved by the English national board has increased from six in March 1985 to 241 in April 1991. Flexible methods of conversion have also been introduced which will help speed up the rate of conversion. The United Kingdom central council has changed its rules to allow enrolled nurses who have failed first level training three times to have three further attempts at passing their examinations.

Figures are not held centrally on the numbers of enrolled nurses who have expressed interest in converting to first level status, or on the number of conversion places which have been offered for national health service staff.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the effect of the placing of adverts for grade D nurses only on the right of other enrolled nurses to apply for posts in the national health service; and what provisions are included in Whitley council agreements governing the placing of adverts for D grade nurses only.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for health authorities to determine the appropriate grading for advertised nursing posts, in the light of the grading definitions agreed by the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council, and to decide what qualifications and experience are required. It is open to any nurse who meets those requirements to apply for such a post.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effect the merging of nursing departments arising from implementation of Project 2000 has on restricting the number of nursing places available for conversion courses.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no evidence to suggest that the merging of colleges of nursing has restricted the number of nursing places available to enrolled nurses for conversion courses.

Ashington Hospital

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provisions govern the requirement to employ a fully qualified head of clinical chemistry at relevant hospitals; what restrictions have been placed on clinical chemistry services in Ashington hospital in the absence of a suitably qualified person; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The qualification requirements for clinical scientists of all grades employed within the NHS are set out in advance letter (SP) 1/90, a copy of which is available in the Library. There are no restrictions placed on the clinical chemistry services at Ashington hospital in Northumberland. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Peter Carr, the chairman of Northumberland health authority, for details.

Abortions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on health authorities refusing to undertake a second national health service abortion for women who have a clinical need for them; if he will issue guidelines to health authorities on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities are not required to collect such information. If the hon. Gentleman has a specific case in mind, the district general manager of the relevant health authority should be able to provide details.

Tobacco Labelling

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made in implementing the EC directive on the labelling of tobacco products.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have now made regulations under section 11 of the Consumer Protection Act and section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972 which have been laid before Parliament today. They will come into effect on 1 January 1992 and will fully implement the EC directive on the labelling of tobacco products. The regulations were subject to consultation in draft and as a result I have made the health warnings on cigarette packets larger and clearer than originally proposed.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, columns 63-64.

Mr. Dorrell: The information readily available relates to the register of surveys maintained by the Central Statistical Office. Titles of surveys carried out since my earlier reply are as follows:

Cold Weather Publicity Evaluation 1991
Drugs Information 1991
Nursing: TV Creative Developments

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 54.

Mr. Dorrell: The companies currently employed by, or on behalf of the Department's information division who are involved in the campaigns listed in my earlier reply are as follows:

Central Office of Information
FCO
Ogilvy and Mather
Laing Henry
Peter Cundall Associates
Media Systems
NML Presentations Ltd.
BMP DOB Needham
Barkers Human Resources Advertising Ltd.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what measures he will take in the light of his proposals for the future of the independent living fund, to ensure that adequate funds are made available to local authorities to meet the personal assistance needs of severely disabled people.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government are committed to providing adequate resources for all aspects of community care. Decisions on resources for 1993-94 will be taken during the 1992 public expenditure survey, in the light of discussions with the local authority associations.

Centre for Applied Microbiological Research

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the costs of the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research relate to (a) work carried out for, on, or on behalf of, Porton International Ltd. and related companies and (b) the public health laboratory service.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 9 July 1991]: In the last financial year work for which Porton International was invoiced represented approximately 20 per cent. of the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research—CAMR—costs this year. In the same year the Public Health Laboratory Service bore approximately 40 per cent. of the Centre for Microbiological Research's costs. Funding from other Government Departments and grant-giving bodies comprised the remaining 40 per cent.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Operational Strategy

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of the operational strategy in each financial year from 1991-92 to 1998-99 (a) gross and (b) net of savings.

Miss Widdecombe: At 1988-89 prices the flow of gross costs and net of savings for the operational strategy, from 1991-92 to 1998-99, are currently estimated to be:

	Gross £ million	Net of savings (net cash flow) £ million
1991-92	224·4	−35·4
1992-93	122·9	107·9
1993-94	98·7	148·6
1994-95	92·5	161·9
1995-96	93·4	162·5
1996-97	94·6	161·3
1997-98	91·3	166·7
1998-99	98·6	197·2

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the costs and savings of the operational strategy (a) gross and (b) net of other savings for each financial year since its inception indicating the proportions and sources of the savings.

Miss Widdecombe: At 1988-89 prices the latest estimate of the costs and savings of the operational strategy (a) gross and (b) net of other savings (ie excluding staff savings) from 1985-86 to 1998-99 are in the table.

The proportions and sources of the three savings categories other than staff savings are as follows:

i. Contribution from DHSS Northern Ireland—4·3 per cent.
ii. Residual value of buildings and equipment—10·3 per cent.
iii. Non-salary cost savings—85·4 per cent.

Departmental Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent on events and publicity surrounding the launch of each agency in his Department as an executive agency; and whether the cost was borne by his Department or the new agency.

Miss Widdecombe: Expenditure on events and publicity material surrounding the launch of each of the Department's executive agencies is a matter for each agency's chief executive. For the Benefits and Contributions Agencies, I refer the hon. Member to Mrs. Robinson's letter of 4 June and Miss Chant's letter of 30 May respectively to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers), copies of which are in the Library. For the Information Technology Services Agency, Mr. John Kenworthy, the chief executive, will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and Public Information Office. There was no such expenditure in relation to the Resettlement Agency.

Any expenditure incurred was borne by the agency itself.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish details of the group bonus scheme in operation in each agency in his Department, including the cash amount per person awarded in the last year for which figures are available, and the conditions attached to its award.

Miss Widdecombe: Of the Department's four agencies, only the Information Technology Services Agency operates a group bonus scheme. The scheme operated in 1990-91. Payments, ranging from £50 to £1,500 have been made to a total of 155 staff at a total cost of £32,325. Awards were made for the achievement of specific objectives which produced improvements in service or cash efficiency savings. This pilot scheme is part of an Information Technology Services Agency group bonus scheme which also provides for total bonus payments of up to £400,000 to be paid in 1991-92 in respect of work done in 1990-91. The conditions are that the agency achieves efficiency savings, over and above those required in the Department's management plan, of at least four times the intended bonus payments, while maintaining agreed levels of service. No payment can be made until it is verified that the conditions have been fully met. Payments to any individual are subject to a maximum limit of £5,000.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appointments from the private sector have been made to each agency in his Department at grade 7 or above since its establishment as an agency; and if he will list the post, grade and maximum salary payable including the performance-related element.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not usual to reveal details of the pay arrangements of individual officers, other than chief executives of Next Steps agencies. Within that constraint, the information requested is as follows:

Information Technology Services Agency:

Three appointments have been made at grade 6, the salaries for which are all within the normal civil service range for the grade outside London. One appointment has been made at grade 5, the salary for which is above the normal civil service range for the grade.

Benefits Agency:

Three appointments have been made, one at grade 5 and two at grade 6. These appointments are within the normal civil service range for the grade within the London pay area.

No such appointments have been made in either the Contributions Agency or the Resettlement Agency.

Plawsworth Resettlement Unit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many places for men are currently provided at the Plawsworth resettlement unit; how many are occupied; and if he will list the numbers and locations of the replacement facilities for men within the Northern region.

Miss Widdecombe: The management of the resettlement unit replacement programme is a matter for Mr. Tony Ward, the chief executive of the Resettlement Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 66, if he will list the commencement date and duration of the publicity campaign to which he referred.

Miss Widdecombe: No commencement date has been agreed. The duration of the campaign is still a matter under consideration.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 66.

Miss Widdecombe: The Central Office of Information supervises our major advertising campaigns. Our appointed agency is currently BMP DDB Needham.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 18 December, Official Report, columns 140-41.

Miss Widdecombe: Public opinion surveys carried out by the Department since 18 December 1990 are listed in the table.

1. Disability working allowance—Customer opinion of the assessment form proposed for use in repeat claims to DWA.
2. Attitudes towards personal pensions and other types of pension provision—Self-explanatory.
3. Customer perceptions of resettlement units—Views of the customers of resettlement units about the services provided.
4. National customer survey—Customer opinion of benefits delivered by local and central offices of the Benefits Agency.
5. Savings limit publicity—Evaluation survey.
6. Benefits Agency logo—Customer opinion of new agency logo.
7. Disability freeline evaluation—Second survey.
8. Family credit campaign—Continuing evaluation of campaign.
9. Customer market survey for the Contributions Agency—Customer opinion of service provided and future requirements.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the new child support agency is likely to come into operation, and where the administrative staff are to be located.

Mr. Jack: We plan to establish the Child Support Agency in early 1993—subject to the successful passage of the Child Support Bill. Most of the agency's staff will be located in six child support offices, each capable of housing some 500 staff. There they will do the bulk of processing and assessment work which does not require face to face contact with the customer. Negotiations are taking place which, if concluded satisfactorily, would site offices in Belfast, Birkenhead, the Black Country (Dudley area), Falkirk, Hastings and Plymouth, creating job opportunities for the local communities. Around one third of the agency's staff will be co-located in Benefit Agency offices to conduct interviews, visit customers, pursue local inquiries and offer advice and guidance about the agency's services.

Personal Pension Schemes

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many members of personal pension schemes he expects to opt back into the state scheme within the next five years.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Any estimate would be highly speculative given the large number of variable factors that individuals must consider before exercising their choice. However, the Government Actuary provided some forecast of trends in the personal pension market in his "Second Quinqennial Review of the Long Term Financial Estimates of the National Insurance Fund" published on 25 July 1990 (HC 582), a copy of which is in the Library.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the main training programmes and numbers involved in each of the last three years on offer to people in the (a) Sheffield TEC area, (b) Manchester TEC area, (c) Birmingham TEC area, (d) Leeds TEC area, (e) Glasgow LEC area and (f) in each of the London TEC areas; and how that is planned to change in the current financial year in the same format as his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 15 May, Official Report, column 214.

Mr. Jackson: Table A shows the main training programmes available in Sheffield, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds and Glasgow area offices for each of the last three years of their operation and the average numbers involved in training.

Table B provides similar information for London region only. This is because the complex nature of programme and boundary changes compounded by the differing TEC operational dates invalidates a further division of data.

Table C shows the numbers planned in 1991-92 for the London region and for each of the other TEC areas by name. Plans for 1991-92 for Glasgow LEC is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland to answer. The tables do not reflect numbers likely to be involved in employment action.

It is not possible for realistic comparisons to be made between operational TECs and former area offices. Because of boundary changes none of the TEC areas coincide with the former area office boundaries, and in addition there have been many changes to the programmes provided.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will explain under what circumstances refugees are eligible to join employment training and youth training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My Department will shortly be advising TECs that for 1991-92 they will be able to allow refugees with indefinite or limited leave to remain in the United Kingdom access to employment training and youth training, subject to their meeting the normal eligibility criteria.

Dock Labour Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) to whom he has awarded the contract to carry out the manpower survey currently being undertaken by his Department into the manpower pre and post-abolition of the dock labour scheme; what is the full cost of the survey to his Department; and when he intends to publish the findings of the survey;

(2) which companies, trade unions and organisations it is intended to interview as part of the manpower survey with regard to the abolition of the dock labour scheme; and what part recently set up labour agencies will contribute to the survey;

(3) if he will list each of the terms of reference of the manpower survey with regard to the abolition of the dock labour scheme, and place in the Library a copy of the full remit;

(4) what scope the manpower survey has for assessing the incidence of the use of casual labour.

Mr. Forth: In conjunction with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, I have commissioned MDS-Transmodal and PIEDA plc to undertake a wide-ranging research project into the effects of the abolition of the dock labour scheme in 1989.

The terms of reference of the study, which is expected to cost £140,000 and to take about 15 months to complete, are:

"To assess the economic and social implications of the abolition of the Dock Labour Scheme, by means of a review of existing sources and the collection of fresh data, including attitudinal information, both in the docks and in the wider port areas".

I am placing in the Library a copy of the invitation to tender and the research specification for the project, which includes an examination of the rationalisation of labour practices in the docks since the abolition of the scheme.

It will be for the consultants to decide which organisations to interview during this research project.

I would expect the main findings to be published shortly after the completion of the final report.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 83.

Mr. Jackson: The Department's various research branches do not commission public opinion surveys as such. However, they do carry out research projects on a variety of employment-related issues which involve surveys of individuals I list those research studies, commissioned or partly funded by the Employment Department Group (ED, Employment Service, and Health and Safety Executive), which have involved surveys of individuals carried out since 17 December 1990.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the advertising promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 72.

Mr. Jackson: GGT Advertising is employed by the Department in connection with the career development loans and national training awards campaigns, referred to in the answer of 1 July.

Youth Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each of the 82 training and enterprise councils or employment service administration regions (a) the number of youth training places available, (b) the number of young people seeking a place and (c) the number of young people who left school last summer and are still without an offer of a youth training place.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 8 July 1991]: Information in the form requested is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will (a) make a statement on the delivery of the youth training, (b) list the training and enterprise councils where the youth training is not being met and (c) list the representations he has received regarding the delivery of the youth training guarantee.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 8 July 1991]: The Government are fully committed to the YT guarantee and will see that it continues to be met. The guarantee of an offer of a suitable YT place applies to young people under 18 years who are not in full time education or a job and are seeking training under YT. The local delivery of the guarantee is a matter for TECs who must investigate and resolve any difficulties a young person within the guarantees group may experience in securing a YT place locally.

Young people in the guarantee group can seek to join or rejoin YT at any time and are entitled to continued reoffers while they remain within the group. At any time of the year there are therefore young people seeking to join YT. I am not aware of any TECs which are currently failing to meet the guarantee but I am aware that the choice and availability of placements with employers may be being affected by the current recession.

In these circumstances I strongly endorse the Construction Industry training board's recent call for its industry's employer bodies to promote YT to its members and deplore the decision by the Transport and General Workers unions to seek to reduce the number of opportunities available to young people.

Departmental records do not separately identify representations about the YT guarantee and this information could therefore be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of young people on bridging allowance for each of the employment scheme administration regions by providing a comparison of change and percentage change for the period January 1991 to May 1991 and January 1990 to May 1990, including the totals and the average.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 8 July 1991]: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service Executive Agency are the responsibility of Mike Fogden, the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the procedure involved in ensuring training and enterprise councils deliver the youth training guarantee; and whether independent organisations are being used to monitor the performance of TECs in the delivery of the guarantee and to resolve any differences between the Department and the TECs regarding what constitutes the guarantee being met.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 8 July 1991]: Provision for meeting the YT guarantee is made by TECs in their corporate and business plans which are agreed with the Department. TECs are obliged to use their best endeavour to meet the guarantees. Ensuring that TECs deliver the guarantee is therefore part of the overall contract management of TECs, which is the responsibility of the Department's regional directors. From time to time the Department employs independent consultants to examine and advise on various aspects of the Department's relationships with TECs or TEC performance. Monitoring the performance of TECs in relation to the YT guarantee or in other respects is however, a matter for the Department. Decisions as to what constitutes the guarantee being met are taken in the context of the Department's contract with TECs.

SCOTLAND

Bird Killing

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number of licences issued under section 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to permit the killing of (a) cormorant, (b) goosander and (c) red-breasted merganser in (i) Scotland and (ii) the Tweed catchment, for each year between 1985 and 1991, to date, to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The details are as follows for the period 1985-91:

1. The number of licences granted for one or more species in Scotland were:

	Number
1985 (January-December)	59
1986 (April-June)	49
1987 (April-June)	44
1988 (February-April)	41
1989 (February-April)	37
1990 (February-April)	42
1991 (February-April)	50

2. The licences granted for one or more species in the River Tweed catchment were:

	Number
1985	2
1986	2
1987	2
1988	2
1989	1
1990	1
1991	1

The Nature Conservancy Council (NCC) has been consulted in advance of each shooting season. It was agreed with them and fishery interests in 1986 that any shooting under licence of these species should be restricted to April-June which coincided with the peak period of the smolt run on which the birds predated. In 1988 relevant interests agreed that shooting under licence should be restricted to the months of February-April on the ground that it would be less cruel to shoot birds outwith their breeding and nesting season.

It was decided in 1989 with the agreement of the NCC that the number of licences issued for the Tweed area should be restricted each year to one. This policy gives the licensees, the River Tweed Commissioners, overall responsibility for the control of birds causing damage to fisheries in the area.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number of (a) cormorants, (b) goosander and (c) red-breasted merganser killed under licence in (i) Scotland and (ii) the Tweed catchment for each year between 1985 and 1991, to date, to prevent serious damage to fisheries.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The details are as follows for the period 1985-91:

1. Birds reported killed under licence in Scotland.

	Cormorants	Goosanders	Mergansers
1985 (January-December)	500	224	451
1986 (April-June)	134	194	263

1989 (February-April)	112	383	247
1990 (February-April)	335	673	421
1991 (February-April)	381	504	235

2. Birds reported killed under licence in the River Tweed catchment

1988	50	258
1989	5	30
1990	17	264
1991	26	164

No application has been received to shoot mergansers in the Tweed catchment during this period.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the amounts of hazardous waste imported into Great Britain for incineration through Scottish ports from the Irish Republic in each year since October 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office does not hold information on the amounts of hazardous waste imported from the Irish Republic through Scottish ports for disposal of incineration in England and Wales. No such waste has been imported for incineration in Scotland since the Transfrontier Shipment of Hazardous Waste Regulations 1988 came into force.

A96 Survey

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber on 27 June, Official Report, column 535, whether he will state the date and time of day at which the survey of pedestrian/vehicle flows on the A96 at Fraser park, Nairn, was undertaken.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The survey was undertaken on Friday 16 November 1990 between 8 am and 5 pm following representations to Highland regional council from a Nairn district councillor in October 1990.

Health Visitors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of health visitors employed by Greater Glasgow health board in April and November of each year beginning in April 1988.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available for the months requested. The number of health visitors employed by Greater Glasgow health board at 31 March and 30 September for the years requested is shown in the table:

	Whole-time equivalent	Number
March 1988	278·2	291
September 1988	289·0	301
March 1989	276·6	291
September 1989	299·3	313
March 1990	281·3	295
September 1990	265·7	279
March 1991	286·3	301

The figures exclude combined and triple duty nurses.

Hospital Incinerators

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland further to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 365, if he will identify the national health service hospitals in Scotland where waste incinerators have difficulties in complying with current pollution control legislation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Two clinical waste incinerators are experiencing difficulties in complying with current pollution control legislation. These are located at the Western and Royal Infirmaries in Glasgow. Greater Glasgow health board is pursuing a vigorous course of action to deal with these difficulties.

Hospitals (Waste Disposal)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what special instructions have been issued for the adequate disposal of waste resulting from treatment of patients suffering from serious contagious diseases in Scottish national health service hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A code of practice entitled "Hospital Infection Manual" has been issued to health boards. This code contains guidance on the disposal of waste resulting from treatment of patients suffering from serious contagious diseases in Scottish national health service hospitals.

Senile Dementia

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each of the health board areas the number of males and females suffering from senile dementia aged (a) up to 65 years, (b) 66 to 75 years, (c) 76 to 85 years and (d) over 86 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no nationally maintained register of persons suffering from senile dementia in Scotland. Figures are however collected on people with dementia who are resident in, or who have been discharged from, NHS hospitals; and these are set out in the following tables. I must emphasise that studies of the prevalence of dementia in the population over 65 indicate that these figures represent only a small proportion of the total number of people suffering from senile dementia.

Alcohol Abuse (Deaths)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths took place in national health service hospitals in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Scotland as a whole with the principal diagnosis relating to alcohol abuse or misuse for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The figures requested are set out in the table. The causes of death included have been selected by the Registrar General as being the most relevant, based on current medical advice, and are shown below the table.

Deaths in National Health Service hospitals from selected causes, Strathclyde and Scotland, 1979-90

Fishing

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what time scale has been set for the conclusion of the EFTA negotiations relating to fishing opportunities in the Community; and if he will give details;

(2) whether his Department has carried out an analysis of the impact on Scottish fishermen of any liberalisation of the trade in fish between Norway and the Community resulting from the EFTA discussions; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what discussions he has had with Scottish fishing interests in connection with the likely outcome and impact of the current European Free Trade Association negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is hoped that the current EC-EFTA negotiations will be concluded by the end of July.

These negotiations cover a wide range of commodities and the Government are taking careful account of the potential impact of any agreement on the industries affected. This of course includes the fishing industry and officials have discussed these negotiations with the Scottish Fishermen's Federation.

Further Education

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of male and female children aged 16 to 18 years in Inverclyde remained in full-time education for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information at this level of detail is not held centrally.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were registered unemployed in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow in each year since 1980, by electoral ward.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The available information, from June 1983, for electoral wards defined on the basis of 1984 ward boundaries, can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the House of Commons Library. Library staff are ready to assist in accessing the information if necessary.

Renaval Programme

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the local programmes, in the Inverclyde district, which are to receive financial support by way of the European Community's Renaval programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Projects to be funded under the Strathclyde Renaval programme will be decided by a programme monitoring committee which will be established once the Commission approves the programme.

Employment Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of employment training placements for the last available financial year were in work places; and what percentage were in project-based schemes in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information for Scotland as a whole is set out in the table.

April 1990-March 1991

	Per cent.
Estimated percentage of Scottish Employment Training placements in workplaces with employers	19·6
Estimated percentage of Scottish Employment Training placements in project based schemes	40·0

The information sought is not available for areas within Scotland either in the form requested or for the precise areas stipulated. It is possible to disaggregate information only by former Training Agency area office areas and to provide figures only as a percentage of the Scottish total.

Information on this basis for 1990-91 for the Training Agency area office areas which encompass Inverclyde district and Strathclyde region is set out in the table.

River Clyde (Discharges)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases there have been of unauthorised discharges into the River Clyde in the last 10 years; of these how many led to court proceedings and convictions; and what was the average fine imposed against such miscreants.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Some information on these matters is contained in the annual reports of the Clyde River Purification Board, copies of which are in the Library. More detailed information, however, is held only by the board and I have asked it to write to the hon. Member.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 91.

Mr. Lang: I shall place a list of surveys in the Library as soon as possible.

Playgroups

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps he has taken to determine the financial impact of the imposition of registration and inspection fees on non-profit-making play groups, mother and toddler groups and under-fives groups in Scotland;

(2) whether he will bring forward proposals to exempt non-profit-making play groups, mother and toddler groups and under-fives groups from registration and inspection fees under section 10 of the Children Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: When the Children Act 1989 comes into force on 14 October, fees payable by applicants for registration will be prescribed by regulations, as will annual inspection fees. The Government have not yet decided on the level of fees. We fully recognise the value to children and their families of the services provided by local playgroups, often within very tight budgets. We shall take this into account when we come to prescribe fees.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of farms, the numbers of hectares and the average area per farm in hectares which are in the set-aside scheme in each region in 1991.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table:

[1] Region	Number of Farms	Area set aside (ha)	Average area/farm (ha)
Borders	37	2,261	61·1
Central	19	709	37·3
Dumfries and Galloway, Orkney, Shetland and the Western Isles[2]	9	104	11·6
Fife	20	1,269	63·5
Grampian	337	10,796	32·0
Highland	50	2,240	44·8
Lothian	18	1,327	73·7
Strathclyde	37	665	18·0
Tayside	90	3,662	40·7
Scotland	617	23,033	37·3

[1] Information is provisional pending the processing of the 1990-91 set-aside claims.
[2] Data for these regions have been grouped together for reasons of confidentiality.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the uptake of the set-aside scheme in (a) the number of farms and (b) the area of land set aside in hectares for 1990-91.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1989-90, the second year of the set-aside scheme, a cumulative total of 498 farms in Scotland set aside 18,840 hectares of land. This increased in 1990-91, to 617 farms setting aside 23,033 hectares.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest (Compensation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 653, when the hon. Member for Linlithgow may expect a letter on his assessment of the size and number of other estates in a similar position to Glenlochay.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I expect to be in a position to write to the hon. Member very shortly, once some necessary information has been obtained from the Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland.

Playgroups

Mr. Wray: To asks the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in implementing section 10 of the Children Act 1989, he will make sure that no fees for registration and inspection are charged to non-profit playgroups with charitable status.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Playgroups provide a valuable service for children and their families, often within very tight budgets. In fixing the fees for registration and inspection, which will be prescribed by regulations under the Children Act 1989, we shall take account of the position of playgroups.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mortgage Repossessions

3. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of mortgage repossessions in Northern Ireland in 1990.

Mr. Needham: Repossessions statistics are not provided by the mortgage lending institutions on a regional basis. National totals are published by the Council of Mortgage Lenders in its GB quarterly publication "Housing Finance".

Constitution

13. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met leaders of the political parties in Northern Ireland to discuss constitutional matters.

Mr. Brooke: On Wednesday 3 July.

Anglo-Irish Conference

15. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when Ministers from the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland Governments will next meet within the context of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Sir P. Duffy).

Cross-border Co-operation

16. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has recently made to, or received from, the Government of the Republic of Ireland regarding co-operation in security matters.

24. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-border security co-operation between the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic.

Dr. Mawhinney: At the meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental conference on 26 April measures to enhance security co-operation were discussed in detail with Irish Ministers. At that meeting, both Governments reaffirmed their commitment to continue to work together to counter terrorist violence. My right hon. Friend intends to return to those discussions at the next meeting of the conference.

Armagh Four

17. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received concerning the imprisonment of Winston Allen, Noel Bell, James Hegan and Neil Latimer, known as the Armagh Four; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend has, in addition to a petition and numerous letters from the public, received representations from Members, Lords, churchmen and others about the case. These have generally sought to encourage him to exercise his discretionary power to refer the case back to the Court of Appeal, which he would do only if some new evidence or consideration of substance is produced.

Rail Services

18. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the disruption of rail services in Northern Ireland arising from both acts and threats of terrorism.

Mr. Needham: In spite of acts and threats of terrorism, Northern Ireland Railways continues to provide an important service to people on both sides of the border. Those who seek to disrupt it, not only cause needless hardship and inconvenience but put lives at risk.

Political Talks

19. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the response to his latest political initiative.

23. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the talks between the Northern Ireland political parties on the future of the Province.

26. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding the current talks over political progress in the Province.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw).

NHS Trusts

20. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to introduce national health service trusts into Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Health and Social Services is consulting on an application from the Royal group of hospitals for health and social services trust status which, if successful, would result in the creation of a trust. Varying degrees of interest in trusts status have been expressed by other hospitals.

Electricity Privatisation

21. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has finalised the date for the privatisation of Northern Ireland Electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Subject to the necessary legislation being approved by Parliament, the Government hope to be in a position to complete the sale of the power stations in spring 1992, and aims to float the remainder of NIE's business on the stock exchange later in the year.

Home Ownership

22. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the level of home ownership in Northern Ireland since 1979.

Mr. Needham: The growth in home ownership in Northern Ireland since 1979 has been a noted success. In that year the total number of owner-occupied properties was 256,500 which represented 52 per cent. of the total housing stock. By the end of 1990 this figure had risen to 347,500 or 66 per cent.

Conservative Party

25. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Northern Ireland Conservative party to discuss the talks on the future of the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall be meeting representatives of the Conservative party constituency associations in Northern Ireland in the near future for a general exchange of views on Government policy.

Terrorism

27. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has had about the prevention of terrorism; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government regularly receive and consider representations from a wide range of bodies and individuals about the prevention of terrorism.

The Government remain determined to defeat terrorism through the even-handed and energetic enforcement of the rule of law. The RUC, supported by the Army, continue to make progress to this end, in the knowledge that Government will provide them with adequate resources, including legal resources. The Emergency Provisions (N.I.) Act, which received its Royal Assent on 27 June, is a further example of this support.

However, the prevention of terrorism will not be achieved by security measures alone. The Government are also working, therefore, to implement effective measures in the political, social and economic fields.

Stevens Inquiry

28. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the cost of the Stevens inquiry to date; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I understand that up to 3 July the cost of the Stevens inquiry has been £868,480.

Mr. John Stevens, the deputy chief constable of Cambridgeshire, at the request of the chief constable of the RUC, conducted an inquiry into allegations of collusion between members of the security forces in Northern Ireland and loyalist paramilitaries. After a most thorough examination, he presented his report to the Chief Constable on 5 April 1990. Action on the report's conclusions and recommendations is being taken by the police and Army.

Publications

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all publications relating to Northern Ireland ordered to be stocked by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, in each of the last five years; the total cost of each publication; and who was awarded the printing contract.

Mr. Maples: I have been asked to reply.

A search of HMSO's title database shows the following number of publications with Northern Ireland or Ulster in the bibliographic details:

Year of Publication	Number
1986	512
1987	653
1988	642
1989	765
1990	699

This does not, of course, represent the totality of HMSO publications that may relate to Northern Ireland in some way but it would involve disproportionate cost to examine each of the over 40,000 new items published by HMSO over this period for specific relevance.

Similarly, the other details requested could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Colin Wallace

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, if he will make a response to the most recent representations he has received about the case of Colin Wallace.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend replied to a letter from the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 5 July.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the number of people employed in shipbuilding and shiprepair in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At 31 May 1991, the latest date for which figures are available, some 2,458 people were employed in shipbuilding and shiprepair in Northern Ireland.

Fair Employment

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that draft copies of the Fair Employment (Monitoring) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1991 are available to the House when it considers the draft Fair Employment (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

Mr. Needham: I have arranged for copies of the draft Fair Employment (Monitoring) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1991 to be placed in the Library to facilitate debate on the Fair Employment (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

Health and Social Services Councils

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has given consideration to the extent to which funding will be required for health and social services councils, in order that they may fulfil their functions and meet the requirements to reflect the interests of the consumer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: Yes. I recently met the four health and social services council chairmen to discuss finance and asked them to draw up budgets for the current financial year and for 1992-93, taking account of advice from the health and social services boards and the Department of Health and Social Services. I have undertaken that the councils will be adequately funded to represent the interests of the public in the health and personal social services in their areas.

DEFENCE

Challenger 2 Tank

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, whether he has yet placed the production contract with Vickers for the Challenger 2 main battle tank.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. Contractual negotiations have been successfully concluded between my Department and Vickers and the contract for two regiments of Challenger 2 main battle tanks was placed on Friday 28 June.

Attack Helicopter

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the procurement of a new attack helicopter for the Army.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following our withdrawal from the collaborative A129-LAH studies, we have decided that the attack and armed reconnaissance roles would be best met by separate helicopters. We plan to replace the Lynx in the anti-tank role by an off-the-shelf purchase towards the end of the decade. To this end, we propose to issue a request for proposals against a cardinal points specification in the spring of 1992. The requirement for an armed reconnaissance helicopter will be considered separately.

RAF Bases

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the former RAF bases which have closed since 1987 (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) abroad.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1987 the former RAF bases at Barnwood, Bawdsey, Binbrook, Bishops Court, Hendon and North Coates in the United Kingdom have closed. There have been no overseas base closures in this period. We have also announced our plans for the full or partial closure of RAF Abingdon, RAF Biggin Hill, RAF Church Fenton, RAF Ely, RAF Halton, RAF Hullavington and RAF West Raynham in the United Kingdom, as well as the cessation of flying at RAF Gutersloh and RAF Wildenrath in Germany.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by location the RAF bases in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) abroad.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following is a list of active bases where there is a permanent RAF presence:

Manning Levels

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish with the Statement on the Defence Estimates the current and planned totals for (a) three-star posts, (b) two-star posts and (c) one-star posts, distinguishing military and civil posts, and distinguishing for military posts between command and staff appointments and for civilian posts between scientific-engineering posts and administrative ones.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Much work still has to be done to establish the future requirement for starred posts. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State informed my hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) on 4 July, at column 213, it is planned to reduce the uniformed and civilian top structure in headquarters by about 20 per cent. Related reductions will be made throughout the services and among civilian staff. The current number of posts, and the corresponding data for 1990, is as follows. The figures do not include officers undergoing training, on handovers or on terminal leave.

International Military Services Ltd.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current position with regard to the closure of International Military Services Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been decided that International Military Services Limited is to cease trading on 31 July 1991, but the company will remain in being until all its current obligations are discharged.

Civil Servants

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 4 July to the hon. Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes), (1) whether he has any plans to offer civil servants premature voluntary release packages as part of his plans to reduce the number of MOD civil service staff;

(2) what are the grades of civil service jobs that are due to be eliminated, and the numbers in each grade;

(3) whether he has plans to make compulsory redeployments of MOD civil servants;

(4) what plans he has to make MOD civil servants redundant; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what discussions he has had with civil service trade unions regarding his planned reductions in the size of the civil service;

(6) what agreements have been reached with civil service trade unions regarding his planned reductions in the size of the civil service;

(7) what plans he has to allow MOD civil servants to transfer to other areas of the civil service.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 4 July representatives of the departmental trades unions were informed about our plans for a reduction in the size of the MOD headquarters. The trade unions were invited to comment on the plans in accordance with agreed consultative procedures. They are also being consulted about reductions in civilian staff outside headquarters under "Options for Change", as our plans develop. It is intended to bring about the required reduction in numbers by a variety of means, including a reduction in recruitment, natural wastage, transfer to other Government Departments if possible, and voluntary early retirement. Where necessary, civil servants in mobile grades will be expected to honour their mobility obligation. Everything possible will be done to avoid compulsory redundancy, though this may not be possible for all grades. Further work is continuing to identify the precise numbers and grades affected.

Conventional Forces in Europe

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what decisions have been made regarding the method and timing of reductions in British treaty-limited items of military equipment that are due to take place as part of the CFE treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Reduction of United Kingdom treaty-limited equipment—tanks and armoured combat vehicles—will be carried out by explosive demolition, as described in the protocol on reduction. The necessary reductions will be completed within 40 months of the treaty coming into force, as specified in the treaty.

Service Redundancies

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy to extend the 28-day training period for personnel leaving the services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are reviewing future resettlement provision. I cannot anticipate the outcome of the review.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 2 July, Official Report, column 136, to the hon. Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs), if he will provide further details on the nature of the advice and counselling given to those leaving the services.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Personnel may seek advice from their units resettlement or education officers at any time during their careers, and there is also provision for more formal interviews during the last 18 months of service. The guidance provided in these ways is intended to inform personnel about the opportunities and problems likely to be encountered in making the transition to civilian life and, more specifically, about the range of resettlement briefings and training options that are available. The briefings are organised on a collective basis at various locations, and cover such matters as applying for a job; specific civilian careers; life in different regions; and other facets of civilian life, such as purchasing a home and managing one's finances. Such briefings last one or two days, and personnel may attend a number of them, in addition to the 28-day training period.

RAF Closures

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the strategic rationale behind the disbandment of No. 16, No. 58 and No 63 squadrons RAF Regiment;

(2) what is the strategic rationale behind the closure of (a) RAF Hullavington, (b) No. 7 flying training school at RAF Church Fenton and (c) RAF Abingdon.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) on 2 July, at column 138, and to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991".

Operation Granby (Injuries)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of service personnel being treated for physical injuries or illnesses resulting either wholly or partially from Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This information could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel have had some form of treatment for physical injuries or illnesses resulting either wholly or partially from Operation Granby.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraph 7 of the box entitled "Medical Support" at page 19 of volume 1 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991"—Cm. 1559-1.

Racial Harassment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 133, what action has been taken as a result of the complaints of racial harassment recorded in 1988, 1989, 1990 and 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: All complaints of racial harassment which came to the attention of Ministry of Defence headquarters during the years 1988, 1989, 1990 and, to date, in 1991 were investigated and the results were as follows:

	Complaints substantiated	Punishment	Complaints unsubstantiated
1988	1	[1]2 offenders fined	[2]3
1989	1	[1]1 offender fined	3
1990	—	—	[3]3
[4]1991	—	—	1

[1] All fined for common assault.
[2] Includes 2 complaints subsequently withdrawn.
[3] Includes 1 complaint subsequently withdrawn.
[4] 1991 to date.

Recruitment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown by region of recruiting figures to the British Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I will write to the hon. Member.

Regiments

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information is currently held centrally regarding (a) the running costs and (b) the operational effectiveness of individual Army regiments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None; there is no requirement for information at this level of detail to be held centrally.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the regiments in the Army and where they are currently serving.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following table lists all Regular Army combat arm major units and their current base locations.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the release of de-classified information on the safeguarding of nuclear weapons against (a) theft and (b) unauthorised use to his counterparts in other countries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Any such case would be considered on its merits giving due regard to United Kingdom national interests and international obligations.

MOD Land

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has established targets for the sale of surplus MOD property and land either (a) to housing associations or (b) on the open market.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

RAF Bentwaters and Woodbridge

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with (a) the relevant local authorities and (b) his United States counterpart regarding the future employment and housing needs of civil service personnel employed at RAF Bentwaters and RAF Woodbridge.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department has discussed various issues arising from the United States withdrawal from RAF Bentwaters and RAF Woodbridge with Suffolk county council and Suffolk coastal district council.

Army Resettlement

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of staff in the Army resettlement employment liaison cell, the titles and grades of staff attached to the cell and its current average annual running cost.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army resettlement employment liaison cell comprises one lieutenant colonel, who is the senior employment liaison officer, assisted by one major, one executive officer and two administrative assistants. Annual running costs are of the order of £200,000.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amount of funding has been provided to the Officers Association and the Regular Forces Employment Association in each year since 1970.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The funding provided to the Officers' Association and the Regular Forces Employment Association in each year since 1970 was as follows:

Year	Officers' Association	Regular Forces Employment Association
1970-71	27,500	15,100
1971-72	27,500	18,700
1972-73	27,800	38,800
1973-74	40,866	43,500
1974-75	44,538	52,780

[1] Forecast.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make it his policy to increase (a) the size of the Army resettlement employment liaison cell and (b) the level of funding provided to the Officers Association and the Regular Forces Employment Association.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The size of the Army resettlement employment liaison cell, which is part of the tri-service resettlement organisation employment unit, and the level of MOD grant to the Officers Association and the Regular Forces Employment Association are kept under review in the light of the demand on their services. The MOD will be discussing with both associations the level of funding necessary in the light of "Options for Change".

RAF Hullavington

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what discussions he has had with North Wiltshire district council regarding the future employment and housing needs of MOD personnel employed or stationed at RAF Hullavington and the barracks at Colerne;

(2) what discussions he has had with (a) housing associations and (b) private firms regarding the future of the barracks at Colerne and RAF Hullavington.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. Discussions will be held with North Wiltshire district council regarding the future of the sites.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with North Wiltshire district council regarding planning permission.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Discussions are held with local authorities as required on planning matters relating to MOD sites.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, columns 5-7.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The opinion poll surveys conducted by, for or on behalf of the Ministry of Defence since December 1990 are as follows:

Subject	Date
Public Attitudes to Defence	Annual
RAF Statement of Equality Research	1991
Research at Welbeck College on recruitment to the Army	1991
RAF—Strategic Research	1991
Target
Market Exploratory Research (Navy)	1991

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 82.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

Royal Navy

Production of a television recruiting advertisement and television advertising campaign.—Young and Rubican Ltd. Advertising Agency to be responsible for television advertising campaign. Contract not yet placed for television recruiting advertising.

Army

Production of a television/cinema recruiting advertising and television/cinema advertising campaign. Press campaign in support of the above.—Advertisement produced by Sid Roberson Films. Delaney, Fletcher, Slaymaker, Delaney & Bozell Advertising Agency responsible for advertising campaign.

Territorial Army

1. A combined TV/Press recruitment campaign highlighting the range of weekend activities in the Territorial Army.—Advertisement produced by Ridley Scott Associates. Delaney, Fletcher, Slaymaker, Delaney & Bozell Advertising Agency to be responsible for advertising campaign.

2. A press campaign to recruit specialist personnel.—Delaney, Fletcher, Slaymaker, Delaney & Bozell Advertising Agency.

Purcell Miller Tritton responsible for production of posters in support of 1 and 2 above.

Tri-Service

1. Press campaign to thank employers for releasing Volunteer Reserve Forces personnel for service during the Gulf crisis.—Young and Rubican Ltd. Advertising Agency.

2. Campaign to increase public awareness of Volunteer Reserve Forces and employers' support for them.—Young and Rubican Ltd. Advertising Agency.

Gurkhas and RAF Regiment

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many infantry battalions or manpower equivalent are contained within the establishment of the Brigade of Gurkhas and the RAF Regiment;

(2) how many British infantry battalions equate, in terms of manpower, to the Brigade of Gurkhas and the RAF Regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are five infantry battalions in the brigade of Gurkhas together with supporting units. United Kingdom infantry battalions vary in size according to role and differences in peace and war establishments. The RAF Regiment is not structured on the basis of battalions. It is not meaningful, therefore, to draw comparisons in this way.

Army

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the men of the Brigade of Gurkhas and RAF Regiment meet his infantry criteria of universality of posting both in terms of geographic location and type of duty, including armoured formations;

(2) what assessment he has made of the quality of soldiering now being provided in the Household Division, Light Division and the Parachute Regiment;

(3) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the British Army is able to meet its present role and tasks;

(4) how many battalion year tasks will be relinquished as a result of his recent assessment of the new military threat now facing the United Kingdom; and if he will list them;

(5) what assessment he has made of whether the training of the officers and men of the Household Division, Light Division and the Parachute Regiment currently fit them to meet his criteria of universality in terms of geographic location and role, including armoured formations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to make a statement on the restructuring of the Army before the House rises for the summer recess. It would not be appropriate to comment on these matters until then.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secetary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement on regimental restructuring in the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said in the House on 2 July, he hopes to make a statement on Army restructuring before the summer recess.

Infantry

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the contribution of the infantry to the modern hi-tech battlefield.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It has a vital contribution to make.

Support Services

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secetary of State for Defence if he will list the current peace-time establishments, by rank of the medical, catering and ordnance support arms of each of the three services and their annual cost in terms of salary.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secetary of State for Defence what is, in his reorganisation of the armed forces, his policy on retention by each of the three armed-forces of its own individual medical (including dental), communications, mechanical, catering and ordnance supporting arms.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In looking for savings in support commensurate with those in the front line, we are examining the scope for rationalisation in all areas. The services will retain individual supporting arms where it is operationally necessary and cost-effective to do so.

Type 2075 Sonar Programme

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what considerations influenced his decision to terminate the contract for the development of the type 2075 integrated sonar suite.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I refer the hon. and learned Member to my answer of 17 June to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) at column 67.

Type 2076 Sonar Programme

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the type 2076 sonar programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Sonar 2076 is the programme to update the sonar suites of the Swiftsure and Trafalgar class submarines. This programme will ensure that these submarines remain effective and capable throughout their lifespan. We have recently awarded contracts for the project definition phase of the programme to Marconi Underwater Systems Limited and Ferranti-Thomson Sonar Systems Ltd.

Communications Project Definition Studies

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the integrated external and internal communications project definition studies.

Mr. Alan Clark: I will write to the hon. and learned Gentleman shortly.

Light Armoured Vehicles

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future requirements of the Army for light armoured vehicles.

Mr. Alan Clark: We are continuing to review our requirement for light armoured vehicles as part of the "Options for Change" process.

RAF Squadrons

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the operational squadrons in the Royal Air Force and where they are currently stationed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The front-line squadrons of the RAF as of 1 April 1991 are listed at Annex D to the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1991" published on 9 July. Their peacetime locations as of the same date are as follows:

RAF Capability

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he is giving in "Options for Change" to medium-level capability for the Royal Air Force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As clearly demonstrated by the operations in the Gulf, the RAF maintains an effective medium-level capability. This will not be affected by "Options for Change".

Naval Landing Platforms

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Royal Navy's landing platform dock replacement programme.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: We expect to place the contract for project definiton of the design of two new assault ships shortly.

Tornado

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the GR4 version of the Tornado aircraft to be fully operational.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Tornado GR4 is planned to enter service in the second half of the decade.

Empty Properties

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number and locations of all those MOD properties in the Caradon area that are vacant at present; what is the length of time that they have been unoccupied; and what are his intentions for these properties.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently 12 vacant married quarters in the Caradon area at Torpoint. These have been vacant for fewer than three months. Eight of the properties are undergoing works and four will be alloted to incoming service families. In addition, one former married quarter is in the process of being sold.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 12 July 1991

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Newtownards Courthouse (Union Flag)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General whether a union flag has been supplied to the courthouse in Newtownards in the constituency of Strangford; why the union flag was not flown on Her Majesty's official birthday; what arrangements have been made to fly the union flag at this courthouse on the designated days; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: A union flag has been supplied to the courthouse in Newtownards but was not flown on Her Majesty's official birthday through oversight. The courthouse is in possession of standing instructions for the flying of flags on all appropriate dates.

Legal Aid

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General for what reasons the Lord Chancellor has decided not to approve the implementation of the scheme proposed by the Legal Aid Board to provide legal advice for defendants in housing possession proceedings.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has yet to take any decision on these proposals which will be issued by the Legal Aid Board for consultation in the autumn.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Education Budgets

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received about local education authorities adjusting their budgets in a way that reduces the value represented by the 16 per cent. allocated for administrative and advisory purposes and therefore the amount available to grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Eggar: I am aware of general concerns on this issue, and have had one specific representation.

Social Work Diploma

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if students for the newly validated diploma in social work by the University of Wales will be entitled to a mandatory grant from local education authorities.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Education Act 1962 restricts mandatory awards to certain categories of course. The diploma in social work course which is provided by the Cardiff Institute of Higher Education and validated by the University of Wales does not fall into any of these categories. I understand that the Cardiff institute has now applied to the university for validation of this course leading instead to a diploma of higher education. Eligible students enrolled on Dip HE courses at publicly funded institutions are entitled to mandatory awards under the 1962 Act and regulations.

History Curriculum

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what extra resources have been made available to fund the new history curriculum.

Mr. Eggar: Resources have not been specifically earmarked for the history curriculum. The implementation of the national curriculum is being supported by the Government via specific grants to local education authorities. These grants totalled some £100 million in 1989-90; some £120 million in 1990-91; and in 1991-92 they will support LEA expenditure of around £170 million.

Eligible expenditure includes the employment of advisory teachers, support for non-teaching support staff, the provision of extra books, materials and equipment and INSET. It is, however, for individual LEAs to apply for these grants, to identify needs and priorities for different subjects in the light of local circumstances and to direct spending towards them.

TRANSPORT

Weston-super-Mare Distributor Road

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be making a decision as a result of the public inquiry concerning the compulsory purchase of land for the Weston-super-Mare primary distributor road, stages VA and VB.

Mr. Chope: The decision should be issued shortly.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kenya Wildlife Trust

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Kenya wildlife trust to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mrs. Chalker: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Services Committee, arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from 16 December to 20 December 1991.

Ethiopia

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts are being made by his Department to ensure that existing food pledges result in immediate food deliveries to the people of Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: The world food programme is responsible for the co-ordination of food aid deliveries to Ethiopia. In order to reach those in need as quickly as possible, we channel our food aid through international agencies, including WFP, UNICEF, UNHCR and British non-governmental organisations. Deliveries of United Kingdom food aid are phased to take account of in-country storage and distribution capacity. Britain has pledged 93,366 tonnes of food to Ethiopia since last September. A total of 55,000 tonnes is already in the country.

Africa

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all additional new funds allocated for food aid emergency relief to each country in Africa between January and the present time.

Mrs. Chalker: The list is as follows:

United Kingdom cereals food aid 1991

Country	Tonnage	Estimated cost £ million
Ethiopia	67,634	16·316
Sudan	67,500	14·531
Somalia[1]	8,000	2·128
Mozambique	17,630	2·953
Angola	7,472	1·700
Malawi	6,000	1·650
Uganda	6,706	0·900
Kenya	3,294	0·400
Totals	184,236	40·578

[1]To be committed when security situation permits.

Operation Lifeline

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support the restarting of Operation Lifeline to the south of Sudan.

Mrs. Chalker: We have committed almost £14·9 million to Operation Lifeline Sudan—OLS—since it began in 1989. We have already pressed the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Peoples' Liberation movement to co-operate in the continuing implementation of OLS.

Mozambique

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been allocated to the transport and delivery of food to Mozambique by his Department from January to the present time; and whether he has any plans to make more money available for (a) relief, (b) market food aid and (c) to assist food transport and distribution to Mozambique.

Mrs. Chalker: We have allocated over £10 million for food aid, including transport, for Mozambique since January. This includes:

—£3·5 million bilaterally and £4·4 million through the EC for food and its distribution within Mozambique.

—£1·3 million bilaterally and £1 million through EC for food and its distribution to Mozambique refugees in Malawi.

We shall continue to play our part with other donors in responding to Mozambique's food aid requirements.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maydown Incinerator

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the incinerator proposed for the Maydown, Londonderry site will be required to have gas/gas heat exchanges to maintain the stack gases well above the gas clear point.

Mr. Needham: Any combustion plant including an incinerator will be required to incorporate heat exchangers to ensure that the flue gas temperature does not fall below the acid dew point.

Departmental Telephones

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will bar telephones in his Department from connection to premium rate services.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 8 July 1991]: All Departments in Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Office in London are reminded that, in the battle to reduce departmental running costs, the use of call barring, especially for premium rate services, can be an effective strategy.

Where it is technically achievable, call barring is applied to STD and international calls in addition to premium rate services throughout Departments in Northern Ireland and London.

Experience has shown that there are sound operational reasons for retaining access to premium rate telephone services for selected Government staff.

Call barring is used on a site-by-site basis to prevent misuse of the telephone system, while retaining an operationally effective service to users. The Department of Finance and Personnel provides central advice to all Departments on the effective use of telephone services. Call logging equipment is used to identify telephone traffic at a significant number of sites.

HEALTH

Estate Maintenance

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will quantify the total cost of the backlog of maintenance on the national health service estate for each district health authority.

Mr. Dorrell: On 31 March 1990 (the latest information available) the cost of bringing the NHS estate to an overall condition which exhibited only minor deterioration was estimated to be £1·8 billion. The information by health authority is shown in the tables and includes property due to be replaced within three years, property not used for patient care, property awaiting planned preventive maintenance and property awaiting disposal. These four types of property together represent about 30 per cent. of the total NHS estate. In 1982 a report "Underused and Surplus Property in the NHS" said:

"It is clear that the backlog has accumulated over very many years" and estimated that the cost of the work required to bring property in England up to an acceptable standard would be of the order of £2·9 billion, at 1990 prices.

Between 1979-80 and 1990-91 capital spending in the NHS rose by 62 per cent. in real terms. About 77 per cent.

of the resources allocated to NHS capital are invested in the estate and in the current year over 400 building projects each costing over £1 million are at various stages of planning, design and construction. The capital building programme for 1991-92 exceeds £1 billion.

Guidance on Hospital Discharge

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent steps his Department has taken to encourage health authorities to ensure that guidance on hospital discharge is followed in hospitals from which they purchase services.

Mr. Dorrell: Existing guidance continues to be binding on health authorities. Purchasers will be able to specify in their contracts with providers the discharge procedures they wish to see followed.

Food Poisoning

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing for each district health authority in London the number of food poisoning incidents reported for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not available in the form requested. Cases of food poisoning reported to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys by each of the four Thames regional health authorities for the period 1979-90 are set out in the table.

Notifications of food poisoning which were (a) formally notified, (b) ascertained by other means and (c) total by regional health authority: 1979-90

Note:

(a) "formal notifications" are made by the doctor in attendance to the proper officer for each local government district under the Public Health (Control of Diseases) Act 1984.

(b) cases "ascertained by other means" are identified during outbreak investigation.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for curtailing the publication of national health service waiting lists; what consideration he has given to the implications of such a proposal for health budget holders wishing to shop around for treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no intention of curtailing the collection and publication of information on waiting lists and times.

We currently collect and publish information on waiting lists and times in districts within which treatment is provided. However, this does not show waiting performance of individual hospitals, and is a poor guide for "shopping around". From April 1991 we are also collecting figures by district residence. Both sets of figures will be collated within my Department for up to two years so as to ensure continuity of data while the new data flows settle down.

Thereafter we propose to collect centrally only the residence-based figures, in order to monitor purchasing health effectiveness in securing early treatment for their residents. Statistics on waiting times at individual hospitals will continue to be held at local level, as now. Arrangements will be made for ensuring the wide availability of hospital level information to purchasing health authorities, GP fund-holders and others before the central collection of provider-based statistics is finally dropped.

Medical Manpower

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the report of the review of continence services.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 10 July at column 410.

Children's Homes

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many residential placements each local authority in England and Wales intends to provide in children's homes in 1992;

(2) how many new local authority children's homes were opened and in which local authorities in England and Wales in (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991;

(3) how many residential placements were provided in children's homes on 1 June in each local authority in England and Wales;

(4) how many local authority children's homes were closed and in which authorities during (a) 1988, (b) 1989, (c) 1990 and (d) 1991.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information available centrally relates to the number of children in the care of each local authority who are in children's homes rather than the number of homes or places. This information relates to the local authority responsible for the child not the authority responsible for the home.

This information is published in "Children in Care of Local Authorities", a copy of which is available in the Library. The most recent edition is for the year ending 31 March 1988: the 1989 edition will be published shortly.

Child Care Initiative

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the recent child care initiative from the European Community Social Affairs Commissioner and Her Majesty's Government's policy towards it.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no knowledge of any recent child care initiative taken by the European Commission. The Council recommendation on child care mentioned in the press release issued by the Commission on 3 July has not yet been forwarded to the Government.

HIV-AIDS Tests

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tests for HIV and AIDS have been carried for each health authority in England and Wales for each of the past five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 4 July 1991]: Data on the number of tests carried out for the human immunodeficiency virus (there is no test for AIDS) by region and district are not collected. However, an indication of the trends in testing can be obtained by examining the total numbers of HIV tests (not including the tests associated with unlinked anonymous testing) carried out by the public health laboratory service laboratories for England, Wales and Northern Ireland. These are given as follows (to the nearest 500).

	Number
1986	102,500
1987	161,000
1988	142,000
1989	141,000
1990	167,500

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many tests for HIV and AIDS have been carried out on pregnant women in the past five years in each health authority in England and Wales;

(2) how many of the pregnant women who have been tested for AIDS in England and Wales over the past five years had positive test results; and how many were informed of the result of the test, by health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 4 July 1991]: Data on pregnant women tested via voluntary named testing are not collected centrally.

In the anonymised HIV ante-natal survey a total of 52,813 samples were tested between January and September 1990. The numbers tested and the prevalence rates are as follows:

Area	Number of specimens tested	Prevalence—one person in
Inner London	23,166	500
Outer London and rest of South East England	13,668	1,500
Rest of country	15,979	16,000

CIVIL SERVICE

Polygraphs

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what use has been made of polygraphs in the civil service during the past five years.

Mr. Renton: None.

WALES

Orthopaedics Treatment Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what bids he has received for expansion of the operating theatre complex at the treatment centre for elective orthopaedics at the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar; what number of waiting list initiative artificial knee and hip operations are to be undertaken under the terms of the bid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: A bid of £300,000 for additional theatre facilities to serve the whole of the Prince of Wales hospital, Rhydlafar has been received from South Glamorgan health authority under the 1991-92 waiting times initiative. It does not specify the additional throughput that will result and my officials are in touch with the authority.

Official Visit (America)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list his full itinerary for the recently completed investment mission to North America.

Mr. David Hunt: During the mission I undertook engagments in the states of California (San Jose, Los Angeles, San Diego) Minnesota (Minneapolis/St. Paul), Michigan, Connecticut, New York state (Buffalo, Rochester, New Jersey) and New York city; and in Canada I visited Toronto, Peterborough and Ottawa. I visited 20 companies and met over 200 senior company representatives.

Footpath Inquiry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now announce the date and venue of the public inquiry regarding the diversion of footpath 46 at Frampton road, Gorseinon, Swansea.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The order was made by Lliw Valley borough council under the Highways Act 1980 in May and has been advertised. There has been one objection. The order must now be submitted to my right hon. Friend for determination. Once it has been received a public inquiry will be held before a decision is reached. As promised in previous correspondence, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman once the inquiry has been arranged and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Council House Sales

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the value of council house sales in each of the Welsh housing authorities since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: The information which is available is shown in the following table; figures for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are not available on a consistent basis.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been received from the sale of council houses in Wales since 1979; how much of this sum has been kept by the councils; and how much has gone to central Government.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Capital receipts from council house sales have totalled £734 million from 1981-82 to 1990-91. These receipts are not, and never have been, returned to central Government but are used by councils themselves either to finance new capital expenditure or to redeem debt.

Cardiff-Wales Airport

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to publish the Government's response to the Welsh Affairs Committee report, HC 166 of Session 1990-91, on Cardiff-Wales airport.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the repsonse has been published today as Command Paper 1584.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the highest award of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each year from 1981 to date, (b) the lowest award, (c) the average award and (d) the total award in the same years.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is shown in the following table:

Prison Escapes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department received following the foiled attempt at a mass escape from Crumlin Road prison, Belfast, in October 1989 about the smuggling of Semtex, a pistol and ammunition into the prison in the heels of trainer shoes; and what subsequent action was taken to alert all prisons in the United Kingdom to this technique.

Mrs. Rumbold: Officials from the prison service in England and Wales meet officials from Northern Ireland and Scotland several times each year to discuss security and to share information. This is regular and ongoing.

The problems of concealment of various weapons and other contraband in footwear is very well known. Specific warning advice was issued to governors in England and Wales in December 1985 about the dangers of weapons being concealed in this way. Similar advice on the dangers of contraband items being concealed in shoes was issued on eight separate occasions between August 1982 and April 1991. The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland.

Prisons (Industrial Disputes)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons which at 9 July had an industrial dispute; and if he will also list the nature of the disputes.

Mrs. Rumbold: Industrial disputes, registered under the agreed disputes procedure between prison service management and the Prison Officers Association, were recorded at 49 prisons in England and Wales as at 11 July 1991. The establishments are listed. The majority of the disputes are about staffing figures. Other disputes cover matters including shift systems, local conditions and overcrowding, prison regimes and opposite sex postings policy.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictive practices exist in the prison service.

Mrs. Rumbold: The "fresh start" agreement in 1987 involved the abolition of a number of inefficient working practices and systems of attendance. This was followed last year by the removal of outdated national restrictions on the civilianisation of prison officers' work. There is still scope in some instances for securing the more efficient matching of work and resources within individual establishments. That is something which is currently being addressed through an establishment-by-establishment work identification exercise known as the corporate objectives process.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on improvements in productivity at Brixton prison since the inception of fresh start.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under "fresh start" efficiencies in the use of prison officers' hours are being achieved through progressive reductions in their average working week. The extent of the efficiencies which are achievable varies between establishments depending on the way that work is organised and on changes in workload since 1987. At Brixton, between April 1987 and April 1991 there was a 24 per cent. efficiency improvement in the use of prison officer hours, which is slightly more than the national average of 22 per cent.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the effect on the "fresh start" initiative on prison regimes.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since the "fresh start" initiative to improve efficiency in the use of prison service manpower was introduced in 1987, there has been a general improvement in the level of regime delivery with an 8 per cent. increase in activity hours per inmate in 1989-90 and a further 7 per cent. increase in 1990-91.

SCOTLAND

Local Authority Housing (Transfers)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authority houses have been voluntarily transferred to (a) private companies, (b) housing associations, (c) tenant co-operatives, (d) Scottish Homes and (e) any other landlord by each housing authority in Scotland in each year since 1989.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The following tables give details of voluntary disposals of local authority houses to which my right hon. Friend's consent was given in 1989-90 and 1990-91 in terms of section 12(7) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 or section 74(2) of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973.

Forth Valley Enterprise

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of public money given to Forth Valley Enterprise, with a breakdown stating the amounts given to individual training companies; and whether he will express all the amounts as expenditure per trainee.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The distribution of funds from within its grant-in-aid to local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 131.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The advertising companies employed by my Department in connection with the campaigns referred to in my answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 131 are Faulds Advertising Ltd. of Edinburgh and The Leith Agency of Edinburgh.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the commencement date and duration of each of the publicity campaigns given in his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 131.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The duration of the advertising campaigns referred to in my answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 131 are as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

EC Environment Policies

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement of his policy on (a) EC proposals to ban the sale of fish contaminated with pesticides and (b) plans for the EC's own environmental protection agency.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom has consistently supported the concept of the European Environment Agency (EEA) and greatly regrets that the delay in deciding its location is holding up its establishment. We see the provision of objective, reliable and comparable environmental information at the European level, which is the aim of the EEA, as the only sound basis for formulating environmental policies. As to the first part of the question I am not aware of any EC proposals on this subject.

Marine Pollution

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the outcome of last year's conference of North sea states; what is his policy on (a) a ban on dumping of nuclear waste at sea and (b) a declaration to reduce output of pollutants blamed for blooms of toxic marine algae.

The Prime Minister: We made it clear at last year's North sea conference that we have no plans for disposing of radioactive waste from ships or seabed artificial structures into or beneath the seabed. We have always followed the recommendations of the competent international organisations on the dumping of waste and agree that this disposal option is not suitable for the North sea. Nevertheless we have not completely ruled out sea disposal for large items such as boilers from decommissioned power stations and are keeping under review whether this disposal option may be required at some further date.

Algal bloom, including toxic marine algae, occurs naturally in the marine environment, but, in slow-moving shallow water areas with a high proportion of freshwater from rivers, nutrients from agriculture and sewage discharges can be a determining factor. In the North sea these conditions occur along the eastern coastal seaboard particularly in the Wadden sea and Skaggerak. Given the circulation pattern of the North sea, discharges of nutrients from the United Kingdom do not contribute to this problem.

Arms Control

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what initiatives he plans to take to advance the aims of avoiding world over-armament as agreed in annex VII of the Presidency conclusions of the European Council meeting at Luxembourg on 28-29 June.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 July 1991]: We are actively pursuing a number of initiatives to encourage greater responsibility and transparency in the international transfer of conventional weapons, and to combat proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. The five leading arms exporters met in Paris on 8-9 July and agreed to develop machinery for continuing consultations on arms transfers. A further meeting will be held in London.

The Paris meeting also endorsed our initiative to establish a United Nations register of arms transfers. The initiative has attracted wide support. The European Council on 28-29 June announced that the Twelve will present a resolution to set up such a register at the next United Nations General Assembly.

These issues are on the agenda of next week's London economic summit.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the arrangements in place for the assistance by the United Kingdom of environmental clean-up, environmental protection and industrial development for countries of eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The know-how fund is the main focus of the United Kingdom's environmental and industrial assistance to eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. On 21 June we announced an environmental programme for eastern Europe worth £5 million over three years. Multilaterally we co-ordinate our efforts through the G24 with participation by all OECD countries and relevant international organisations. There are separate G24 sub-groups which address environmental issues and investment and economic/industrial restructuring. In addition to EC's Poland and Hungary aid for economic reconstruction (PHARE) programme has so far made available some £152 million for economic/industrial restructuring and £71 million in environmental help.

G7 Economic Summit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what environmental initiatives (a) he intends to raise and (b) Her Majesty's Government have been informed that other heads of state and Governments intend to raise at the forthcoming G7 economic summit in London.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The summit is an informal meeting between Heads of Government. I hope that the summit will give impetus to the run-up to the UN conference on environment and development, in particular on climate change, the protection of biological diversity and the conservation of forests.

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has had with representatives of international businesses concerning the G7 summit; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 July 1991]: I met representatives of the International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) on 2 July to exchange views on the issues likely to arise at the London economic summit. The ICC endorsed the importance which the Government attach to low inflation as a necessary condition for sustained growth in the world economy and shared the Government's wish to secure early progress in the Uruguay round of GATT talks. We also discussed the ICC's ideas on technical assistance to the Soviet Union and the countries of central and eastern Europe.

DEFENCE

Chipmunks

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the annual costs of running the Royal Naval grading flight of Chipmunks out of Plymouth airport for each of the last five years, setting out the individual figures for flying costs, airport costs and training costs.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. The total annual cost of the grading flight over the period in question was:

Year	£ 000s
1986-87	772·0
1987-88	901·5
1988-89	929·0
1989-90	952·7
1990-91	978·0

MOD Police

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost to his Department of moving the headquarters and other facilities of the Ministry of Defence police to RAF Wethersfield; and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The relocation has been agreed on the basis that costs will be more than offset by the savings which will be made.

Nuclear Submarines

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all United Kingdom nuclear fleet submarines, the year each submarine came into service, the likely year for each to be decommissioned and the plans for that decommissioning, including possible location; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The nuclear fleet submarines currently in service are:

Vessel	Accepted into service
Valiant	1966
Courageous	1971
Swiftsure	1973
Sovereign	1974
Superb	1976
Sceptre	1978
Spartan	1979
Splendid	1981
Trafalgar	1983
Turbulent	1984
Tireless	1985
Torbay	1987
Trenchant	1989
Talent	1990

In addition, Dreadnought was withdrawn from service in 1982-83 and is currently stored afloat at Rosyth. Churchill, Conqueror and Warspite were withdrawn from service in 1990 and are currently in the process of being decommissioned. Churchill is at Rosyth and Conqueror and Warspite are at Devonport.

It is not our practice to release in advance details of projected dates or planned locations for decommissioning nuclear-powered submarines.

Manpower

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the current and planned totals for (a) three-star posts and (b) two-star posts and (c) one-star posts, distinguishing military and civil posts, and distinguishing for military posts between command and staff appointments and for civilian posts between scientific/engineering posts and administrative ones.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 11 July 1991.

Injured Grenadiers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the meeting which took place between his officials and the solicitor representing the three injured guardsmen.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The meeting provided a full and useful discussion on the merits of the case. MOD officials provided some further information to the solicitor and undertook to provide other information as requested.

Redundancies

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer given by the Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 2 July, Official Report, column

149, what is his policy on informing hon. Members about forthcoming announcements of redundancies at his Department's workplaces.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend's general practice is to give notice to those hon. Members whose constituents are mainly affected whenever the number of civilian staff in question is 25 or more. That is the same threshold as is agreed for consultation with trade unions at departmental level. Proposals of lesser scale are normally handled at local level.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Norwegian Fishing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy in the European economic area negotiations with Norway to insist that any new fish provided by Norway should be allocated among EC member states in accordance with the principle of relative stability.

Mr. Curry: Under relative stability, established EC fishing opportunities are divided among member states according to fixed keys, although new fishing opportunities may be allocated according to new keys. In the negotiations for a European economic area, the Government are continuing to work strenuously to safeguard the principle of relative stability.

Cows Milk (Dioxin)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has yet determined the source of the dioxin found in the milk of cows from the Bolsover area.

Mr. Maclean: A detailed research programme will shortly be under way on the two farms concerned and on a number of other farms in the area. However, the complexity of the scientific analyses that need to be carried out means that there will be some delay before they can be completed.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many reports of damage to farm workers following exposure to organophosphorous sheep dips he has received in the last six months; and whether he has received any similar reports relating to other types of sheep dip.

Mr. Maclean: Between 1 January and 30 June 1991, seven reports of suspected adverse reactions to sheep dips involving farmers and farm workers have been received by the veterinary medicines directorate. Six involved organophosphorous compounds and one a non-organophosphorous compound. The reports cover incidents which occurred between July 1985 and April 1990. All are being followed up.

In addition, we have received 18 brief reports from the National Poisons Centre which our officials are also investigating. We are not yet able to say whether these reports include duplicates of those mentioned, specifically involve farmers or farm workers, or relate to the use of organophosphorous compounds.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effects have been identified on agricultural employment by Reading university in its evaluation, commissioned by him, of the set-aside scheme and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have recently received Reading university's evaluation of set-aside and am now studying it. The university will be publishing its findings later this year.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Conventional Forces in Europe

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the updated memorandum of understanding required under the conventional forces in Europe treaty giving the details of the location of British forces in the United Kingdom and continental Europe.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

A copy of the updated British data exchanged in accordance with section VII of the protocol on notification and exchange of information to the CFE treaty has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received a copy of the updated memorandum of understanding required under the conventional forces in Europe treaty giving the details of the location of United States forces in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

We have received in accordance with section VII of the protocol on notification and exchange of information the data provided by the US Administration as required under the CFE treaty, which includes details of US forces in the United Kingdom.

United Nations Emergency Operations Office (Africa)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to make representations to the United Nations Secretary General concerning the re-establishment of an office for emergency operations in Africa.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: No. We welcome the United Nations Secretary-General's announcement on 7 July that he is strengthening the Office of the Under Secretary-General dealing inter alia with relief operations in Africa in order to be able to respond effectively to emergencies. The Office is to enjoy the responsibilities and powers which fell to the Office for Emergency Operations in Africa until its closure in 1986. We are pursuing separately in the United Nations our initiative to support and improve the United Nations response to humanitarian emergencies.

Hong Kong

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current salary of the governor of Hong Kong.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The present salary of the governor of Hong Kong, which is set and paid by the Hong Kong Government, is Hong Kong dollars 160,100 per month.

Croatia and Slovenia

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the position adopted by each EC country, including the United Kingdom, at the last meeting of the Council of Ministers regarding the recognition of Croatia and Slovenia as independent sovereign states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Under the Brioni agreement of 7-8 July Slovenia and Croatia have agreed to suspend for three months implementation of their declarations of independence. EC Foreign Ministers met in The Hague on 10 July and confirmed their support for the Brioni agreement. The EC has also agreed to support constitutional talks aimed at meeting the aspirations of all Yugoslavia's peoples.

Expo 92

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to encourage Crown colonies to bring forward proposals or exhibits for the British pavilion at Expo 92, Seville; and if he will list those Crown colonies so far approached.

Mr. Garel-Jones: No such steps are being taken because, as has been made clear in answer to previous questions, it is not our intention to solicit exhibits for the British pavilion at Expo 92 on a geographical basis.

British Hostages

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British hostages are presently believed to be held in Lebanon; what are their names; on what dates each of them was taken hostage; what information he has about organisations involved in these kidnappings; what is the latest information he has about the whereabouts of the hostages; what steps are being taken to ensure their immediate release; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We believe there are three British hostages being held in Lebanon. Mr. John McCarthy was kidnapped on 17 April 1986; Mr. Terry Waite on 20 January 1987; and Mr. Jack Mann on 12 May 1989. We do not have firm information on which organisations were involved in the kidnappings, or on where in Lebanon the hostages are currently held. We continue to make every effort to secure the release of the hostages, and remain in close touch with all parties we believe may be able to help in achieving this goal.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will place in the Library the applications of bodies to be recognised as supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Redwood: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) on 19 December 1990 at col. 187.

Domestic Accidents

Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 20 June, Official Report, column 282, if he can break down the various causes of fatal accidents in the home.

Mr. Leigh: The information requested is published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys as table 5 in "Mortality Statistics", series DH4 (numbers 13-15 for years 1987-89), copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

New Homes

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has completed his examination of new homes structural warranty services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Following publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on structural warranties for new homes the Secretary of State has been consulting widely on possible remedies. He is considering the outcome of this process of consultation and will announce his decision in due course.

BCCI

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what equity shareholding CCL Assurance had in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International; and what information he has on the amount of clients' funds invested in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International by CCL Assurance.

Mr. Redwood: CCL Assurance has told my Department that it has no equity shareholding in the Bank of Credit and Commerce International (BCCI). It has also provided me in confidence with information about the location of all its assets, including assets representing its policyholders' funds.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department is carrying out an investigation into CCL Assurance, in connection with the closure of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

Mr. Redwood: I am prepared to consider any information the hon. Member may provide which might warrant an investigation.

Bass, Preston Brook

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for the Environment of 8 July, if he has anything to add to his answer of 28 June, Official Report, column 577 about assistance to Bass at Preston Brook.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 July 1991]: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for giving me the opportunity to amend the statement made in my answer of 28 June, that Preston Brook is not in an assisted area. It is, and companies there can qualify for DTI regional assistance. I apologise for this mistake, which arose from an administrative error in my Department. Action is being taken to prevent recurrence. I can now add that Bass received £494,102 of regional development grant under the original scheme, paid in 1987-88; this grant was not linked to job creation.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 19 December, Official Report, column 187.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 July 1991]: There have been no such surveys.

Advertising Campaigns

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the advertising, promotional or public relations companies employed by, or on behalf of, his Department who are involved in the campaigns given in his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 20.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The Department does not normally employ contractors in a purely promotional or public relations capacity. Four advertising agencies are currently retained in connection with activities listed in my earlier answer. They are: WCRS (enterprise initiative); BMP DDB Needham (various); Barkers LBW Human Resources Advertising (staff recruitment); and Spring, O'Brien, Tolson (inward investment—activities in the United States of America).

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will deposit in the Library an analysis of the estimated distributional impact using the Treasury's interdepartmental group on tax-benefit modelling's tax-benefit model of the proposed council tax in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales using the illustrative bills published by the responsible Departments, which is, as far as possible, comparable with appendix 7 of HC 289 of Session 1990-91 and the answer of 22 May, Official Report, column 471;

(2) if he will publish a list of those parliamentary answers on the impact of (a) the council tax and (b) other local government tax options which have been based, in part or in whole, upon evidence derived from the Treasury's interdepartmental group on tax-benefit modelling's tax-benefit model.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

Information to indicate the distribution of households with one, two and three or more adults by region has been provided. No answers have been given on the impact of the council tax using the interdepartmental group on tax-benefit modelling's tax-benefit model.

Since 1988 the Department of the Environment has made extensive use of the interdepartmental group on tax-benefit modelling's tax-benefit model to illustrate the distributional impact of the community charge, and the effect of the transitional relief and community charge reduction schemes. A large number of parliamentary answers have been provided which are reliant to some degree on information from the model. We do not, however, intend to publish any analysis of the impact of the council tax derived from the model.

Drinking Water

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures Her Majesty's Government are taking in order to implement the recent Luxembourg agreement to reduce the level of permitted nitrates in drinking water.

Mr. Baldry: The directive agreed at the recent Environment Council in Luxembourg did not change the level of nitrate permitted in drinking water. It provided for action to reduce leaching of nitrate from agricultural sources into raw water. The Government are considering the scope and content of the measures needed to implement the directive.

Squash Clubs

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the method by which uniform business rates are applied to commercially operated squash clubs.

Mr. Key: No. Most non-domestic property is subject to rates. Ratepayers who were dissatisfied with their rating assessments had the right to challenge them within the first six months of the life of the 1990 rating lists.

Water Companies

19. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the turnover in the last year before privatisation of each of the English and Welsh water authorities.

Mr. Baldry: This is a matter for the companies. However, this information is contained in the annual reports and accounts for the year ending 1989, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Local Government Boundary Commission is going to publish its report on the response to its draft proposals on its review of the boundary of the borough of Rotherham with the boundaries of Sheffield, Doncaster, the county of Derbyshire and the county of Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Key: The conduct of the review is a matter for the commission.

City Challenge

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have bid for city challenge funds.

Mr. Heseltine: Twenty-one. In addition to the 15 local authorities invited to participate in the pacemaker round of city challenge on 23 May [Official Report, column 549], Coventry, Newham, Sandwell, St. Helens, Stockton-on-Tees and Sunderland have submitted bids.

Next week my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Local Government, and I are due to visit the 15 invited authorities to receive presentations of the bids.

I have been impressed by the hard work, enthusiasm and commitment behind all the bids. This is precisely the spirit we are aiming to foster through city challenge.

I have considered carefully six additional bids that we have received and decided that Sunderland and Stockton-on-Tees should also be asked to present their bids to a Minister. We shall then consider their case alongside the invited bids.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State is today writing to the other four authorities to thank them very much for their bids, but to let them know that they will not be successful in this year's pacemaker round of city challenge.

We hope that they will build on what they have achieved and that they will participate in the further round of city challenge which we intend to hold next year, subject to the successful progress of the first round.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has conducted any research on the use of nuclear reactors as facilities to neutralise bacteria and viruses in raw sewage during their decommissioning phase.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 11 July 1991]: No such research has been carried out by this Department.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration had been given at the time of the 1985 Budget to proposals for transitional arrangements to obtain the tax subject to the Woolwich case judgment and to clause 50 of the Finance Bill; when the intention was first made public; and in which way.

Mr. Maples: The 1985 Budget announcement followed confidential discussions between the Inland Revenue and the Building Societies Association over a period of some months, about the building societies' tax scheme as a whole, including the transitional arrangements required on the changeover from an annual to a quarterly accounting system in line with that for banks. A Budget day press release mentioned the need for transitional provisions to deal with the changeover.

Soft Drinks Industry

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the amount of tax paid by the soft drinks industry in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude: We estimate that VAT accruing on consumer's expenditure on soft drinks in 1990 was £430 million. Figures for taxes paid by the soft drink industry itself are not separately identifiable.

Tax Revenue

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the projected additional yield in tax revenue from (a) income tax, (b) VAT and (c) corporation tax over five years consequentially of an annual compounded economic growth rate of 2·5 per cent. assuming that tax rates remain as they are and personal allowances are increased in line with the previous year's inflation.

Mr. Maude: Tax receipts would be expected to rise broadly in line with growth in the economy, perhaps a little faster because of a contribution from real fiscal drag. However, estimates of the effects of economic growth on individual taxes will depend, among other things, on the composition of that growth between the different sectors of the economy, and could be made only at disproportionate cost. Rising tax receipts, under resumed growth in the economy, are an element of the Government's medium-term fiscal projections, published in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report". Projections of tax revenues are shown in FSBR table 2A.4.

Taxation

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the procedure for informing the next of kin about the tax position of the person who has died and when this procedure started.

Mr. Maude: There is no procedure for informing the next of kin about the tax position of a deceased person. This is because an individual's tax affairs are confidential. So when a person dies, the Inland Revenue discloses details of the deceased person's tax affairs only to his or her duly constituted legal personal representatives or persons authorised to act on their behalf. Next of kin very often become the legal personal representatives, but this is not always the case.

Value Added Tax

Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many demands by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise for alleged VAT arrears have been found to be incorrectly calculated in the last 12 months.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Customs and Excise does not maintain a record of incorrect demands for VAT arrears. In the year ended March 1991 approximately 35,000 final demand notices were issued each month for outstanding tax (including civil penalties, surcharge and interest) which had previously been declared by the registered trader as due (or assessed by Customs and Excise) and not paid. Each demand contains a paragraph advising the trader to contact Customs and Excise if they believe the amount demanded is not due or payment has already been made.

Public Opinion Surveys

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public opinion surveys carried out by his Department since his answer of 17 December, Official Report, column 10.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 11 July 1991]: The only public opinion survey that the Treasury has been involved in is the "Share Ownership Survey 1991" which the NOP included on its random omnibus survey between 16 January and 11 February 1991. The cost of £28,780 was shared equally between the Treasury and the international stock exchange.

Foundation for Sport and the Arts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table setting out the rate of football pools betting turnover for each of the past 10 years and the rate of pool betting turnover that would be required to provide (a) £75 million and (b) £70 million to the proposed foundation for sport and the arts, expressed (i) numerically and (ii) as a percentage increase.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard [holding answer 11 July 1991]: Pools turnover (mostly on football pools) based on pool betting duty receipts in each of the last 10 financial years was:

Year	Turnover £ million
1981-82	443·8
1982-83	473·1
1983-84	486·4
1984-85	512·9
1985-86	553·5
1986-87	598·2
1987-88	647·5
1988-89	656·1
1989-90	714·7
1990-91	766·1

It is estimated that, to provide (a) £75 million and (b) £70 million to the proposed foundation for sport and the arts, chargeable turnover (ie not including the exempt donations by clients) would have to rise to (a) £1,000 million and (b) £933 million, representing increases of (a) 30·5 per cent. and (b) 21·8 per cent. over chargeable turnover for 1990-91.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 194

SESSION 1990–91

1st July—12th July 1991

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
